formed for the selfish purpose of the perpetrators. "In men the operation can be performed under a local anaesthetic in 15 or 20 minutes, and in light work occasions no loss of time. In women the operation, involving the opening of the abdomen, means a week or two in bed. In either sex, failures are almost unknown." The bulletin says that calculations by Dr. W. F. Ogburn of the University of Chicago show that the total number of mentally diseased in this country constitute about 10 per cent of the entire population.

Pre-Views

Sunday and Monday. "The Adventures of Marco Polo." United Artists. Cast: Gary Cooper and Basil Rathbone. Impressionistic oriental settings, notable photography, and Gary Cooper's characterization of the Venetian explorer highlight this satirical comedy drama of 13th Century Chinese court life. Sophisticated, tongue-in-cheek treatment, intended to divert rather than inform. Adults.

Tuesday. "Judge Hardy's Children." MGM. Cast: Lewis Stone, Mickey Rooney, and Cecilia Parker. Another of the "Judge Hardy" series tells of his appointment to a Federal office and consequent visit to Washington with his whole family. The trip provides the Judge with an opportunity to demonstrate some of the fundamental principles of democracy, thus adding great educational value without preaching to the production. The film presents a delightful portrayal of a typical family group, the characterizations and dialogue are absolutely natural and the direction is unobtrusively smooth. Family.

Wednesday. "Fools for Scandal." Warner. Cast: Carole Lombard and Fernand Gravet. Comedy. Adults and young people.

Thursday and Friday. "College Swing." Paramount. Cast: Martha Raye and Burns & Allen. Musical comedy. Adults and young people.

Saturday. "A Slight Case of Murder." Warner. Cast: Edward G. Robinson, Ruth Donnelly, Edward Brophy, and Allen Jenkins. A free and easy comedy, with clever, slangy lines, hilarious situations and expert acting, based on the play of the same title by Damon Runyon and Howard Lindsay. It is a freshly amusing travesty on racketeering and concerns an underworld leader who goes into the legitimate brewing business following the repeal of prohibition, only to find it more difficult to deal with so-called "honest" business men than with his own kind. Swift moving from start to finish, it is a thoroughly enjoyable departure from routine cinema fare. Adults.

showed the people tearing up boxes of tea and throwing them away. That was the Boston tea party, but there was also a tea party in North Carolina at Edenton. Another scene showed the inauguration of George Washington. Then there was a Southern scene with boys and girls dancing the minuet. They also showed the Forty Niners going to California in 1849, the secession of the Southern states, and Lee's surrender.

The part I liked best was the schoolroom scene. The teacher went about tapping the children on the head. Another scene I liked was the negro scene. The negroes were singing "Little Liza Jane." The play was forty-five minutes long. At the close everybody sang "America."

The children in the fifth grade wrote the text for these scenes themselves. They did it instead of taking an examination in history. They also had the name of each scene printed on a large piece of cardboard, and some of the children drew some very nice pictures for some of the scenes. One was a picture of Fulton's steamboat and another was a picture of the spinning jenny. The children's mothers made the costumes. They were very pretty.
