Right and Might

In accepting the Socialist party's nomination for President (the sixth time), Norman Thomas says that America must accept universal disarmament as the one hope of peace and "then plant in the world the idea which no dictator can ignore or crush."

The notion that an idea cannot be crushed is cherished by many good people. You can crush men and women and things, they say, but you cannot crush an idea. Well, maybe so, if time is reckoned in terms of eons and eternity. Maybe a noble idea that appears to have been destroyed will be brought to life again by some divine magic or by the gradual improvement of man's nature. Mr. Thomas envisions "an idea which no dictator can ignore or crush."

My newspaper office is on Rosemary, another narrow street, and there too, day in and day out, I see dangerous speeding. It is made the more dangerous because parked cars block the view of persons coming out of the printshop yard and out of the driveways of homes along the block.

I mention these two places because I happen to be most familiar with them. But the same recklessness is to be seen all through the village. We have only two thoroughfares that are broad by modern standards, Franklin street and Cameron avenue. The others served well enough for the few vehicles passing in the old days, but today they are definitely to be classed as narrow. Parking takes out of use for moving traffic one third of the space from curb to curb, and this has the effect of making the streets still narrower. It ought to have the effect of making drivers specially careful, but it doesn't.

Speeding is bad anywhere, but it is particularly bad on narrow streets.

ter to proposals for an international organization stronger than that set up by the UN charter. Indeed, a policy that provides for adequate armed protection for the United States is the very soundest base upon which to build international accord. The voice of a strong nation is certainly more likely to be listened to with respect than the voice of a weak one. Might does not make right, but in the present world situation right stands a dangerous chance of being trampled upon if it is not backed by might.

Speeding on Narrow Streets

If a policeman should visit Battle lane, where I live, I doubt if he would have to wait three minutes, at any time of any day of the week, to see a violation of the speed limit.

It is a narrow street, and often, along the first block off Franklin, cars are parked on both sides, leaving only one lane open for traffic. This is a condition that calls for special care in driving, yet constantly cars come roaring through the narrow passageway at dangerous speed.

Tawney, Distinguished British Scholar, to Deliver the Weil Lectures May 24, 25, 26

Richard Henry Tawney, well-known British lecturer and author and professor of economic history in the University of London, will deliver the 1948 series of Weil Lectures in Gerrard hall at 8:30 on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings, May 24, 25 and 26.

The general subject will be "Social Democracy in England." The first lecture will be on "The English Approach to Socialism," the second on "Policies and Methods," and the third on "The Prospect for the Future."

The Weil Lectures on American Citizenship were inaugurated in 1914 with the former President and future Chief Justice of the United States, William Howard Taft, as the lecturer. They were established on a permanent foundation through the generosity of the families of Sol Weil and Henry Weil of Goldsboro. Among the lecturers have been Roscoe Pound, William Allen White, Edward Alsworth Ross, William Bennett Munro, Charles A. Beard, Henry A. Wallace, Felix Frankfurter, T. V. Smith, Herbert Agar, Dorothy Thompson, Clarence Dykstra and Walton Hamilton.

Mr. Tawney will be the second British citizen and University of London professor to deliver the Weil Lectures. In 1931 the lecturer was Harold Laski.

Mr. Tawney lectured here in 1941 when on a visit to President Frank Graham, a former student of his at the University of London.

He was born in Calcutta, India, and was educated at Rugby and at Balliol College, Oxford. He has been professor of economic history in the London School of Economics of the University of London since 1914, after having taught the same subject at the University of Glasgow and in Oxford University.

His most widely read book is "Religion and the Rise of Capitalism," first published in 1926 and since reissued in many editions. Other books by him are "The Acquisitive Society and Equality," "The Agrarian Problem in the Sixteenth Century," "English Economic History," and "Land and Labour in China."
