Drive Begins for More Decorations

The Trade Promotion Committee of the Chapel Hill-Carrboro Merchants Association began a drive Tuesday to raise $1,200 for additional Christmas decorations in Chapel Hill this year.

Crowell Little, president of the association, said the drive would be carried out as previously planned despite the resignation of J. B. Robbins as chairman of the committee.

Mr. Robbins resigned his chairmanship at a special meeting of the organization's Board of Directors which met Tuesday to pass on the drive as proposed by the committee last week.

Mr. Robbins appeared before the board and presented plans for the drive. However, after its acceptance, he offered his resignation, which the board accepted.

Edward Danziger, a member of the board and the committee has the responsibility of appointing a new chairman, Mr. Little said.

Plans call for the same decorations put up last year, plus additional lights. The board approved the plans on the condition that $700 of the funds raised would be spent in the expense of putting up decorations similar to last year's. Any excess would go for additional decorations.

Chapel Hill Chaff

J. J.

An elderly woman driving through the University campus on Cameron Avenue had to slow down almost to a stop because some students were walking in the street. When she blew her horn one of them yelled at her to go to hell. It hurt her feelings considerably.

When she was telling friends about it a man in the group said, "It's not surprising that many young people have no respect for anybody. They're trained not to. We had always taught our children to say 'sir' and 'ma'am' to adults, but our five-year-old son has refused to do it since he started to kindergarten. He says the teacher tells the children it isn't nice to use those words."

Now that October is about over, it is almost time for the hunters to tackle the wild turkey situation.

Game Warden Bob Logan reports there are only a few turkeys left in Orange County. One of the last flocks near Chapel Hill was in the lowland fastnesses beyond the Mason farm. Its members were hunted down one by one. The final survivor was killed four years ago.

Hunters know the approximate location of every flock in the county, and they won't rest as long as a single bird remains. Not even a wild dog hunts with the implacable determination of the turkey hunter. It is amazing that any turkeys have survived in the face of this grim zeal backed by automatic shotguns.

But the wild gobbler is smart. He understands the snapped twig and the sudden silence in the woods. One thing is his undoing. The turkey call. Fashioned from a bit of wood, or bone

Local Physicians Begin Administering Salk Vaccine to Children 5 through 9

With a moderate supply of Salk polio vaccine on hand, Orange County physicians this week began administering vaccinations to children of the five through nine age group.

Physicians advised that family doctors be called for appointments for the vaccinations during the next two weeks so that the full course of vaccinations may be given before the usual inception period begins next spring.

Children in the age group three through eleven will be given the vaccinations after the two week period for the initial group. Then, one month will elapse before the second shots are given and six months before the third shots.

School children, it was said, who failed to receive either the second or third shots when they were given at the beginning of school this year, should take advantage of the service now being offered by the practicing physicians.

Although a few Salk vaccinations have been heretofore given by private practitioners, their supplies on hand did not justify announcement that it was available through them. Now that they do have a moderate supply, they feel they will be able to accommodate the public. Too, local physicians said they were awaiting approval of the vaccine by the American Board of Pediatrics, which came about 10 days ago.

The pediatrics department at Memorial Hospital and the Orange County physicians are in accord on the procedure announced this week.

Fire Chief Boone Tells Exchangeites Added Equipment Would Save Money

Fire Chief J. S. Boone informed the Exchange Club Tuesday night that local businessmen would save about $12,500 a year in fire insurance payments if the town fire department moves up into a higher efficiency classification.

The saving from reduced fire insurance rates would result if the fire department moved into class six from its present class seven. However, Chief Boone pointed out that to receive the

More Troops to Be Formed

Nearly 600 girls and boys in Chapel Hill, Glen Lennox and Carrboro now belong to the Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts and their younger groups, the Brownies and Cub Packs.

From projected Community Chest funds, additional troops for both organizations will be possible. Boy Scout officials report that 515 boys, not now Scouts, would like to join. Girl Scout officials are planning at least two new troops in Carrboro this year.

No American community needs to be sold on Scouting as a good influence in the lives of growing boys and girls. Boys and girls who come up through Scout work are an asset to the community. The need is to find sponsors and leaders for more troops so that every boy

A seriously crippled Chapel Hill High School eleven takes on its strongest conference foe of the season at Roxboro tonight (Friday) at 8 p. m.

With five regular starters out of the line-up, the Wildcats will meet a club that is undefeated in the conference.

"Even at full strength," Coach Bob Culton said yesterday, "it would have been a tough game. But the boys are showing plenty of hustle this week, knowing what they're up against, and I still expect them to give a good account of themselves tomorrow night."

Robert Lloyd Madden, Thought Drowned, Now Believed to Be Victim of Amnesia

Robert Lloyd Madden, 25-year-old son of a Chapel Hill resident, who had been reported drowned in the Mississippi River in Louisiana June 12, is now said to be alive.

His father, R. P. Madden, left yesterday morning by plane for Baton Rouge, La., after having talked on the phone with a person representing himself to be his son. Mr. Madden, who had given up his son for dead, was convinced his son was the caller in the telephone conversation, but went to Louisiana to be certain.

Retirement System Merger Is Overwhelmingly Approved By Employees of University; School Teachers Vote 16-1

State employees in Chapel Hill voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to merge their retirement system with federal Social Security. Their colleagues across the state joined with them in assuring the merger by an overall margin of more than five to one.

Faculty members and other staff personnel on the University campus favored the move by a margin of better than ten to one. Out of 1,983 eligible voters, there were 1,809 affirmative votes, and 66 persons did not cast ballots (these counted as 66 negative votes). The figures were reported by J. A. Williams, University elections official.

C. W. Davis, superintendent of schools for the Chapel Hill district, said local school teachers had approved the merger by a whopping 16 to one margin. The vote was 80 to 5.

Here is the way the individual schools voted, with the larger figure in each case indicating the affirmative vote: High school 17 to 0, Elementary School 18 to 4, Glenwood 7 to 1, Lincoln 17 to 0, and Northside 21 to 0.

Under the new system, the state and its employees continue to contribute at the same rate (five per cent of salaries and wages) as in the past. However, part of this will be diverted from the retirement system to pay the federal Social Security tax. While workers eventually will draw a smaller retirement from their own system, they will also receive Social Security which will more than offset the retirement decrease.

Eatons Flooded; Coming Nov. 21
A little while after I got home Sunday I telephoned the Carolina Inn to ask if the Walter Prichard Eatons had reserved quarters for the winter. The reply was that they would arrive November 21 and stay until spring.

I found in my mail a letter from Mr. Eaton, written two days before I sailed for Europe August 17 and so more than two months old. He was jubilant over a heavy rain that had come pouring down on his home at Sheffield, in the Berkshire mountains in western Massachusetts.

"Connie has just departed," he wrote, "and has left us rejoicing in a rainfall of six inches. Never was rain more needed. Our lawn—like all other lawns here—was burned brown, ferns and flowers in the garden destroyed, cucumber vines, etc., dead. From July 4 to August 11 we not only had no rain, not so much as a shower, but day after day the temperatures in the shade went over 90. Twice it hit, on the north side of our house, 102. Wells and springs got lower and lower, and we at our house were just facing the possibility of having to abandon the place when Connie let loose the blessed deluge upon us."

In Europe I read cable dispatches about the later murderous floods in New England. "Western Massachusetts" was one place mentioned as being a flooded area, and I wondered if the Eatons had been struck and prayed they had been in one of the fortunate dry, or relatively dry, spots.

An hour or so after reading the August letter I met the Eatons at the Inn cafe, and Mrs. Emery said Ed and Mrs. Emery had got a letter in which Mr. Eaton told of their home's having been flooded with frightful force. They live near the foot of a mountain and the water had come down upon them suddenly in angry cataracts.

Mr. Eaton wrote a piece about it for a newspaper. The clipping couldn't be found when I got home weeks later, but Mr. Hunter told me something of what was in it. Mr. Eaton wrote that he had looked out of a window and seen "the garden going by." All outdoors that they could see was under water. All movable objects had been tossed to and fro. The house stood firm but the basement was full of water. A highly treasured part of the estate, namely the cow, was marooned on a little spot of high ground.—L.G.

Sherwin-Williams Store Opens Here
Chapel Hill's newest retail business—Sherwin-Williams Paints—opened formally at 404 West Franklin Street yesterday.

Manager Bob Boyce said he was well-pleased with the reception accorded the opening, which is featuring a sale. Many persons registered yesterday—and will be permitted to do so today (Friday) and tomorrow (Saturday) for ten prizes of steam irons or percolators. The drawing for the prizes will be at 5 p. m. tomorrow.

In addition to paints, the attractive store features a free color service and counsel on painting and wall papering, rentals of home equipment, and convenient terms.

"Opening of a Sherwin-Williams retail outlet in Chapel Hill attests to the business potential of the community. Manufacturers seldom operate retail outlets in areas the size of which are comparable to Chapel Hill unless they have great faith in their growth and pride," Mr. Boyce said.

Halloween Party Planned

The Community Church will hold a Halloween party from 7:30 to 9:30 Monday evening, October 31, in the Hillel House. There will be games for everybody. Children may wear Halloween costumes if they wish. Because of the party, the church's discussion group has postponed its meeting on "Comparative Protestantism" from October 31 to November 7.
