It's a Very Small World

Martha Belle Caldwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Caldwell of Chapel Hill, took an archeological trip from the American School of Classical Studies in Athens, Greece, to Levadia in the northern section of that country last week.

Suddenly she was hailed by a young man. He was Emmett Pendergraph, son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Pendergraph of Rt. 1, Chapel Hill, who is installing cotton mill machinery in Levadia. His wife and daughter were with him.

When Martha Belle returned to Athens, she noted that the Sixth Fleet was in. In a short time, she learned that the fleet was there seeking her. Lee Edward, who was executive officer of the NROTC in Chapel Hill four years ago, was commander of the fleet. Having lived next door to the Caldwelles when the Edwards were here, he decided to look up Martha Belle in Athens.

It is at Levadia that are found two well-known springs. The Spring of Memory has all its water piped to the town and the children of Levadia have the reputation for having the best memories in the country. The other is the Spring of Forgetfulness, and it was the misfortune of Wallace Caldwell to be very thirsty when he was at that spring in 1931. He drank of the water and blames that for his forgetting names.

Chapel Hill Chaff

By Joe Jones
W. O. Lacock, who has been running a shoe shop in Chapel Hill for forty-one years, claims that automobiles have made big changes in the shoe repair business.

"They've knocked hell out of it," he says. "People used to walk and wear their shoes out, but now everybody rides and their shoes last forever."

Mr. Lacock said U. S. Congressman Carl Durham of Chapel Hill was a good example of what he was talking about.

"Mr. Durham used to get his shoes half-soled every month or so," Mr. Lacock said. "That was when he lived on Cameron Avenue and walked back and forth to his job at Eubanks' Drug Store. Now he rides almost everywhere he goes, and his shoes hardly ever need fixing."

Billy Bob Bowman, hot-rodder nonpareil, says the most guineas he ever saw in his life were standing on the highway when he turned the first sharp curve on the Hollow Rock Road on his way to Durham the other day.

"Must have been at least twenty-five," Billy Bob said. "Taking their time walking across the road, and I didn't see them till I was almost in the middle of the flock. I did some real quick braking and eased in among the whole gang without touching a one. I could hear them chattering all around me and even under the car. You know how silly they sound."

Billy Bob imitated the guineas. I hadn't heard any lately, but his imitation reminded me forcefully that they do sound silly. Then he imitated the way his car

All-Out Effort Planned for Friday by Community Chest's Volunteer Workers

Chapel Hillians are going to have to contribute a fourth more than they did last year if the Community Chest goal of $25,000 is going to be reached, Walt Baucom, chairman of the fund raising campaign, said yesterday.

"We need at least a 25 per cent increase in contributions to make up the difference between last year's collections and the budget which has been set for this year," he said.

Last year $22,088.98 of a goal of $25,733 was collected for the nine agencies under the Community Chest. This year there are 10 local agencies which will receive benefits from Chest funds.

The Community Chest drive will begin with a big "Community Chest Day" Friday. Chest workers will go all-out on that day to collect as much of the goal as possible, Mr. Baucom said.

Division chairmen are now working to have everything ready for the "Chest Day," he said. "Workers are receiving instructions to call on every home and business in Chapel Hill and its suburbs Friday. They are going all-out to get in touch with all the people."

"The campaign is being arranged so that people will be called on only once to contribute," he said.

"We only hope that the contributors will see the need of giving 25 per cent more than they did last year. This goal must be reached if the 10 agencies are going to continue their high standard of service to Chapel Hill.

"Give once for all, and give enough. Your contribution is needed if the Community Chest goal is to be reached."

Comic Strip Editor Named for Luxon

When Norval N. Luxon, dean of the University's School of Journalism, taught journalism at Ohio State one of his students was Milton Caniff, now a famous cartoonist and the author of the well-known daily comic strip, "Steve Canyon."

Chapel Hillians who read the strip in the Raleigh News and Observer or the Durham Sun have noticed that one of its current characters is a newspaper editor named Luxon. When Dean Luxon was asked if he thought the "Steve Canyon" editor was named for him, he replied, "I guess so. Caniff has a habit of naming his characters after people he has known in real life."

Part in Play

Suzanne Davis of Chapel Hill has one of the parts in "Androcles and the Lion," to be presented here November 14-18 by the Carolina Playmakers.

Bill Friday Unanimous Choice for Presidency

The right man was selected for the presidency of the Consolidated University.

So spoke the Board of Trustees—unanimously—on Friday at Raleigh when they elected William C. Friday president of the three-fold institution.

Victor Bryant of Durham, chairman of the selection committee, nominated Mr. Friday, saying that under his presidency the University would "face a new, glorious era with a new and capable leadership" under which the traditions will not be abandoned but will be projected into a modern age."

Governor Hodges told the trustees after they voted that "we made no mistake here today." He welcomed the new president with "great enthusiasm and a wonderful look to the future . . . He has done a great job in every way (as acting president)."

One of the seconding speeches was made by Rep. John W. Umstead of Chapel Hill, a member of the trustees executive committee.

After the election, Mr. and Mrs. Friday were congratulated by the board as its members filed by individually.

Friday Speaks to Trustees

After his election, Mr. Friday addressed the trustees as follows: Twenty-five years ago, in a special message to the General Assembly on the proposed legislation providing for the consolidation of our three institutions, Governor O. Max Gardner observed that this act would "make possible, ultimately, the united support of North Carolina behind one great, unified, coordinated and intelligently directed educational enterprise."

"That was his dream for our University. These twenty-five years have been a time of progress and accomplishment. Our institutions have achieved a high degree of coordination. They have intelligent direction.

In thinking back over these twenty-five years, the names of many men come to mind: Frank unselfish and devoted leadership. We must be mindful of the hundreds of devoted faculty and staff members who by splendid teaching, scholarly research and administrative service, have established for our institutions the world-wide reputation they enjoy.

Graham, Gordon Gray, Charles Woolen, William Carmichael, Logan Wilson, Harris Parks, William Whyburn, Julius Frost, W. C. Jackson, Edward Graham, W. W. Pierson, John Lockhart, Robert House, L. B. Rogerson, Claude Teague, E. C. Brooks, John Harrelson, Carey Bostian, Finn Bowen and Graves Vann. From their minds, their hearts, and their hands we have gotten

And, we must recall the spirit and enthusiasm of our student generations that have contributed much to the progress we have made. It is fitting on this day, and at this occasion, we look back to review and appreciate anew all that has been done for us. You, as Trustees, have gathered again to set a course for our future. You are here to fulfill your responsibility, under the law of electing a president and, thereby, placing in his hands the administration of our University under the guidance and direction of your general policy declarations.

You have chosen to invite me to assume this great and important responsibility, and I humbly accept your election, pledging you, in so doing, my full strength and capabilities in working in the interest of these institutions.

In accepting this position, I do so with the understanding that you are joining with our faculties, staff members and with me in actively working for the continued growth and development of these institutions. You hold a position of public trust given you by the people of our state, through the General Assembly, to see to it that these institutions meet their obligations, their challenges, and their opportunities. We, in the University, have the delegated duty to carry forward the work of these institutions and to insure the greatest level of excellence attainable. Together, we have a duty to all of the people of North Carolina to meet these responsibilities squarely and without hesitation.

This means that we must keep always an atmosphere of freedom—responsible freedom—in which our faculties and students may study and work. As Governor Hodges said recently, "The University of North Carolina has a great tradition and reputation for defending the rights of all people to express their views however much they may differ. That tradition must be kept alive in all its glory." To this, I wholeheartedly subscribe.

We must work to provide adequate resources for our institutions. We need increased salary funds to retain our distinguished faculties and to attract new faculty members to meet enrollment demands. We must greatly strengthen our libraries. We must stimulate research and provide the equipment and material needed by our faculties and students.

In all our endeavors, we must seek the highest levels of excellence. Finally, the University must deserve the positive and constructive support of all the people of North Carolina.

We have a challenging opportunity before us. We are entering an era of great accomplishments if we but put our minds, our hearts and our hands to the task. With your willingness to

Old-Time Chapel Hillians Stop By to Visit Sisters and Scenes of Childhood

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Pritchard of Lore City, Ohio, were here last week on a visit to Mr. Pritchard's sisters, Mrs. Clyde Eubanks and Mrs. R.O.E. Davis. They left Friday to continue their way south and will spend the winter in Florida.

Mr. Pritchard, 72, and his two sisters are the last of ten children of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Pritchard of Chapel Hill. The family was brought up in the big old wooden house on Pritchard Avenue now occupied by Zeb Council. In those days the area from the Pritchard house on out beyond what is now Noble Heights had no houses on it and was known as Pritchard Field, a name old-timers still call it by.

As a boy, J. W. Pritchard became interested in telegraphy by watching R. R. Best, Chapel Hill's first telegraph operator, sending and receiving messages in his office on the second floor of the building that now houses Sloan's Drug Store. Telegraphy became his profession. Now retired, he is called back every year to send out reports of the World Series baseball games as they are played. Both this year and last year he handled the Dodgers-Yankees World Series games in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Pritchard are now relaxing and enjoying life to the fullest. They stay at their home in Ohio during the summer and in the fall take off on a leisurely automobile journey to whatever place they have decided to spend the winter in. Last year it was Arizona, this year Florida.
