Henderson Climax Celebrated

This photograph of George Bernard Shaw and Archibald Henderson was taken in Shaw's home, 10 Adelphi Terrace, London, in 1924. Henderson's whisker-free face is too well known wherever the Weekly circulates to make it necessary to identify Shaw by the word, left.

Yesterday, Thursday the 15th of November, was the day of publication of Henderson's final and complete biography of Shaw. Here in Chapel Hill there was a triple celebration of the event: a speech by Henderson at right in Gerrard Hall, a reception afterward in his honor in the assembly room of the Library, and an exhibit of Shaw books and articles, letters, postcards, manuscripts, and memoranda in his handwriting, and pictures of him

CHAPEL HILL CHAFF By Louis Graves

It was a wet, gray, and chilly day last Friday. In the late afternoon, on the way home from having anti-freeze put in our car, we stopped for a little call on the Oscar Hamiltons. When we came home, shivering in the dusk, our spirits were suddenly lifted by the sight of a great cluster of flowers leaning against our front door. It was made up of gorgeous yellow chrysanthemums, and in the midst of these, like jewels in a setting of gold, were dark red velvet roses. There was no card with the gift and we wondered who had put it there. A little later we found out by telephone: it was our neighbor across Battle lane, Felix Hickerson.

For the thirty-five and a half years that I have lived on Battle Lane I have passed the President's House at least twice a day and on many days several times, and in the last fifteen years I have always given it an attentive look to see if it appeared to be occupied.

I doubt if any university in the country has had a president's house that has contained the president such a small part of the time since the beginning of World War II as ours has. This was due to the demands that the United States Government made for the help first of Frank P. Graham and then of Gordon Gray. The Board of Trustees didn't like to do without either one of them but couldn't refuse the urgent appeals from the White House. So they were both off on long leaves of absence.

It has often occurred to me in passing the house that it

Miss Joanne Tilley Seriously Injured

Miss Joanne Tilley of near Chapel Hill is in N. C. Memorial Hospital suffering multiple and serious injuries resulting from an automobile accident on the road between Nelson and the Raleigh-Durham Airport early Wednesday morning.

Miss Tilley, who lives on the Greensboro Highway beyond Carrboro, sustained broken ribs, chest injuries, lacerations, bruises and possible internal injuries in the accident. Details of how it might have occurred are lacking. The wrecked car with her in it was not found until about 4:30 a.m. Wednesday.

She had left her work at the Raleigh-Durham Airport at midnight to come home. So, the accident must have occurred shortly after midnight. Whether her car was struck by another was not known. The automobile was a total loss.

Miss Tilley is well-known here. She is employed at the Varsity Theatre as bookkeeper in addition to working at the airport.

Considerable Interest Shown in Contest

R. L. Humber Tells Faculty Club About Creation of N. C. State Art Collection

Robert Lee Humber, president of the North Carolina State Art Society, delighted the Faculty Club at its luncheon Tuesday with a talk about the new State Art Museum in Raleigh.

The North Carolina Legislature set a precedent among the states of the Union by appropriating in 1947 a million dollars for the purchase of works of art. This followed the offer of a million dollars for the same purpose by the Kress Foundation on the condition that the gift would be matched by the State.

Baucum added that the rain was a big factor in slowing down the drive. Over 700 workers are helping to collect donations in Chapel Hill.

County Leaders Will Meet Sunday to Help Bring U.N. Message to Everybody

Fifty Orange County leaders who have pledged themselves to acquaint everybody in the county with the work and purposes of the United Nations organization will hold their first meeting at 3:30 p.m. this Sunday in the Courthouse in Hillsboro. The group, being organized by D. D. Carroll and Jack Lasley, is known as the Central Committee of the Orange County Chapter of the American Association for the United Nations.

The idea for such an organization here began last summer when Mr. and Mrs. Carroll were having lunch with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Porter Graham at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. Mr. Graham, former University president now on the U. N. staff, told Mr. Carroll an all-important work, but so many people don't know about it. We need the support of the people. We must reach the grass-roots.

Miss Georgia Faison Is Given European Trip as Thanks for Faithful Service

The surprise party given yesterday afternoon at the Graham Memorial for Miss Georgia Faison was not exactly a complete surprise. She had received a warning about it last Sunday.

For several weeks University faculty members had been raising a fund to be presented to Miss Faison as a token of their appreciation for her many years of faithful work in tracking down references for them. (She is about to retire from the post of Reference Librarian at the University's Wilson Library.)

No, There Won't Be A Hanging

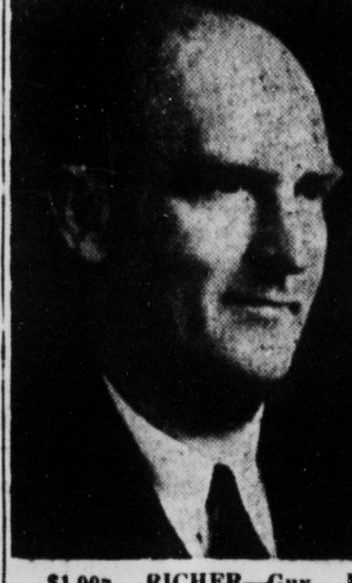

The scaffolding now standing before the main entrance to the University Library is not to hang people from when they keep books out overtime.

It's obvious that the Library doesn't have enough books that the building needs to be jacked up, and a check with the reference department staff revealed that no one has threatened to jump out the window.

High Grid Team to Be Feted Monday

The 35-member Chapel Hill High School football team will be honored at a supper at Watts Grill Monday night at 7 o'clock.

George Barclay, former University football coach, will speak.

$1,000 RICHER—Guy B. Phillips of Chapel Hill was presented a $1,000 bill this week by the State School Boards Association in recognition of his services as secretary to the state-wide organization. Dr. Phillips organized the association in 1937. He is a professor of education at the University. Incidentally, the donors had to send to Richmond to get the $1,000 bill; none was available in Chapel Hill.

The Chapel Hill Country Club this week became the owner in fee simple of the Country Club golf course property.

The University trustees and the trustees of Coker College agreed to rescind the reversionary provisions of the original deed conveying the property to the club so long as it was and is used as a golf course.

The original deed provided that in the event the Country Club failed to use the property for a course, the area would revert to the University to maintain a course thereon. It provided, further that if the University failed to keep a course on the property, the land would revert to the Coker heirs, who constitute the trustees of Coker College, to maintain a golf course thereon.

The intention of Mr. Coker was to protect the rights and privileges of people to whom he had sold property in the area. He had guaranteed them a golf course. In recent months the Chapel Hill Country Club has obligated to spend more than $36,000 on the course and the remodeling of the club house.

"We certainly intend to act in good faith to carry out Dr. Coker's intentions," said Dr. W. G. Morgan, president of the club, yesterday. "We certainly plan to maintain a golf course and to develop it."
