CHAPEL HILL CHAFF

By Louis Graves

Wallace E. Caldwell tells me of a queer gift that his son Robert's family received on their arrival in Karachi, Pakistan, this summer. Bob. as all of us call him, was transferred to the U.S. Embassy there from the post that he had held with the Embassy in Copenhagen, Denmark. When he and his wife and two children alighted from the plane at Karachi they were greeted by the members of the Embassy staff bearing two gifts.

One was a wreath of flowers. Nothing queer about that. And to anybody who had lived in Karachi there was nothing queer about the other one, but it would have seemed queer in Copenhagen and it seems queer to people in our part of the world. This was a giant thermos bottle filled with boiled! water.

Natives of Karachi have built up an immunity which protects them but if visitors from America or West-when this paper went to press ern Europe drink unboiled today and more were expected water they are apt to be before the week is up. taken seriously ill and may die. There was no doubt about the flowers' being the prettier of the gifts, but the Caldwells know from their West Franklin Street Elementary reading and what travelers Schools. had told them that the registered and the Chapel Hill thermos was a lot more im-
