Science Foundation Gives $88,400 For Summer Institute At University Here

The National Science Foundation has awarded $88,400 to UNC for a summer institute in which high school mathematics and science teachers may learn of latest development in their special fields.

It will be the fourth summer that an institute of this type has been held at UNC. Ninety teachers will be accepted for the program, which begins June 13 and runs through July 22.

Co-directors will be E. A. Cameron of the Department of Mathematics and Victor Greulich of the Department of Botany.

A special feature of the 1960 program will be inclusion of 45 previous summer institute participants who will take more advanced courses under a separate curriculum.

Forty-five teachers will be accepted as first-time participants, and a balance will be made in their selection between teachers of mathematics, biological science and physical sciences.

Each participant will concentrate his or her studies in one of the above three fields. Botany, chemistry, mathematics, physics and zoology courses are to be offered; each participant will take two.

Several distinguished scientists will come to Chapel Hill during the institute to give special lectures and spend a day or two meeting with the teachers.

The institute's full time staff will consist of seven UNC faculty members, and two visiting lecturers, to be announced soon.

Locally Developed Proposal For World Peace Will Be Discussed Monday Night

Chapel Hill citizens will be given the opportunity Monday night to discuss a locally developed proposal for world peace—a proposal which already has received consideration from government officials in Washington.

The public meeting will begin at 8:30 p.m. in the Institute of Pharmacy building. All persons interested are invited.

In late September shortly after Premier Khrushchev's visit to the United States a number of local citizens of different vocations, churches, and ages met informally and prepared a "peace proposal" having to do with the development of the underprivileged countries of the world, as an attempted counterpart and response to the Russians' disarmament proposal.

This document was sent on Oct. 15 through routine channels to the White House for submission to President Eisenhower and the National Security Council.

Responsible officials at the White House had a number of copies made and distributed throughout Washington to the State Department and other departments and agencies directly concerned with the aspects of foreign aid and world development which were discussed in the proposal.

After careful study and consideration the White House officials who had received and dealt with the suggestions wrote to the Chapel Hill group, thanking them for their interest and discussing the ideas in detail.

Since mid-November there has been an extended exchange of letters and continued consideration of the proposal both at the White House and among an enlarging group in Chapel Hill.

This has resulted in the suggestion from the White House that the State Department is prepared to send a "knowledgeable person" to Chapel Hill to confer with any local citizens who want to participate in an exploration of what is feasible, appropriate, and promising for the United States to do on the international front in this uniquely opportune time. A number of the persons who have been interested in the proposal met on Sunday, Dec. 29, at the Presbyterian Church to make plans for the State Department representative's visit.

It was decided to invite him to come any time between Jan. 18 and Feb. 6, preferably toward the first of a week. The open planning meeting was projected for Jan. 11, at the Institute of Pharmacy building.

It is hoped that specific plans for work sessions with the Washington representative can be developed, possibly around specific topics such as the use of surplus foods for foreign aid, medical assistance such as the Great White Fleet proposal, the use of U. S. and international funds abroad for building dams, highways, schools, and homes.

Pertinent summaries of the current status of various U. S. and U. N. foreign aid programs and agencies will be available at the meeting.

These issues and concerns have been before the American people in one form or another for many years. The unique aspects of this particular effort would seem to be:

1. The projected World Development Commission is a multi-lateral approach, initially directed through the United Nations, which would seek to share the burden of world development among the prospering economies of the Northern Hemisphere.
2. It is a positive approach toward diminishing current tensions and pressures and creating a world climate in which peace is possible, rather than a reiteration of the impending doom of nuclear war.
3. It seeks to cast the United States in a role of international leadership where our country can act in a morally responsible way as a steward of our unusual wealth and skills:

(4) From the beginning of the correspondence the Chapel Hill people have sought to underscore the peculiar urgency of these questions at this juncture in history and the unique opportunity which may be present now, was not present yesterday, and may not be tomorrow.

Among those persons who have worked actively on the proposal and/or endorsed the original document as it went to the White House are:

Mr. and Mrs. John Adams, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Adams, Mrs. H. G. Baity, the Rev. and Mrs. Vance Barron, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Bowers, Mr. and Mrs. D. D. Carroll, George Coxhead, Mr. and Mrs. John Ehle, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Fambrough, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Faulkner, Mr. and Mrs. Foster Fitz-Simons, the Rev. and Mrs. Charles Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth McIntyre, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Nicholson, Mrs. Caro Mae Ruestel, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Spearman, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Stanford, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Walters, Mr. and Mrs. James Webb, and W. E. Thompson.

Many others have expressed varying degrees of interest. The original meeting was held at the Walter Spearman home on Oct. 4; two others have been at the Presbyterian Church.

Some of the inter-denominational group who sponsored the American Friends Service Committee presentation of "Which Way the Wind," a play about nuclear warfare, are also involved in this effort, along with others who were members of the Presbyterian Study Commission on "Christians and Nuclear War." The present group, however, is not related to any particular church or organization.
