A Talk With Eric Salmon

By J. A. C. DUNN

If you call the Dramatic Art Department at the University and ask for Eric Salmon, they tell you to call the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures. If you call RTVMP you may or may not find Mr. Salmon. When you do find him, he is quite candid about the difficulty of defining exactly what he does at the University.

Mr. Salmon is an English dramatist-director-lecturer-actor who is now more or less UNC's theatre man-in-residence. He is not directly responsible for teaching any classes, and his lectures will be irregular. He will appear at times in both Dramatic Art and RTVMP classes, and will do other things throughout the year all roughly designed to bring DA and RTVMP into some kind of working coordination with one another.

"At the moment I lead a rather leisurely life," he says. This is because nobody has had time to talk to him yet. The Departments of DA and RTVMP are still in the process of getting their feet on the ground after the summer, and Mr. Salmon is pretty much of a supernumerary right now.

Mr. Salmon has delicate, hairless hands and an air of casual nattiness — natty because he dresses well, casual because he does not wear his clothes as if he were about to pose for a collegiate clothing advertisement. He tucks his tie into the top of his trousers because that seems to be the sensible way to make it behave itself; but there are no spots on the tie.

"I got started in the theatre after my university career," he said. "I started in repertory companies. I went through the usual workings. That's one thing Americans may not understand."

He scotched with great speed — but equal tact — the possibility that a repertory company is anything like a Pierrot troupe. "The Birmingham Rep is one of the really great ones. It was founded in 1909, and there are others all up and down the country. I was about 22 when I started. I got in as an assistant stage manager. That's the usual way. They take somebody on to do walk-on parts, and also do some assistant stage managing — you prompt, and mess about with props, make tea, general dogbody. All that mess. But almost as soon as I got into it I decided that I wasn't as much interested in acting as I was in directing. There is no standard way of switching from acting to directing, and I think perhaps that's a good thing. There are so many who think

JC's To Collect Paper And Toys

The Chapel Hill Jaycees will hold a paper drive today, beginning at 1 p.m. Residents are asked to bundle paper they wish to have picked up and placed on curbs in front of their homes. Paper also may be delivered directly to the boxcar at the Carboro depot.

The Jaycees also will pick up toys that can be repaired and used books in readable condition. The toys will be refinished and distributed to needy families through the Junior Service League's Christmas House. Profits from the paper drive will go to the Jaycees' community projects fund.

And Suddenly, A Tent City

One minute it was late afternoon and the camp lots marked with string were a jumble of mounded equipment, and the next minute it was dusk and little tent cities had appeared.

When William Muirhead first conceived of Glen Lennox, a Boy Scout camporee across the highway from the shopping center probably never entered his mind. But Mr. Muirhead's heart would have warmed to see the broad field in front of Glenwood School Friday and Saturday. It was a perfect camping ground for Orange County's Fireball Camporee, except perhaps that the ground is a bit hard, and there are no trees.

Over 200 Boy Scouts were expected. Not quite that many actually showed. By nightfall Fri-

Carolina Offense Fails To Threaten

By BILLY CARMICHAEL III

Carolina ran into an "L" of a Michigan State backfield yesterday afternoon — Roger Lopes, Sherman Lewis and Dewy Lincoln — who, ably directed by sophomore quarterback Steve Juday, completely overpowered the visiting Tar Heels, 31-0, before 60,832 fans at East Lansing.

Between them the "L" boys actually gained exactly twice the yardage produced by the entire Tar Heel attack — 228 yards to 114 — while scoring two touchdowns plus setting up another and a field goal.

For a little more than a half it was a close football game. The Spartans scored the first time they got their hands on the ball, driving 73 yards in 13 plays. But after that the Tar Heel defenses firmed up, allowing only three more points before the halftime.

Twice in the first half the Tar Heels threatened to put themselves on the scoreboard, but neither time could they find the goal line in their script. The Carolina offense is closely attuned to the throwing arm of quarterback Junior Edge. Yesterday afternoon, Edge, who was injured early in last week's game with Virginia, was throwing like a rookie southpaw on the first day of spring practice. As Edge went, so went the Tar Heels.

Early in the second half, the Tar Heels suddenly dropped out of serious contention. Back to punt on fourth down at his own 20, Tar Heel Bill Edwards got a high pass from center and a strong Spartan rush. He decided it best to run for his life and a possible first down. He didn't make it.

Michigan State took over at the Carolina 26 and nine plays later the "L" boys and Juday had punched the ball across to make the score, 17-0. The Tar Heels had passed the point of no return.

The Spartans got two more touchdowns in the fourth period as the Tar Heels began to lose heart. The first of these was a pulsating run by fullback Lopes. The Hawaiian eye-popper from (Continued on Page 6)

'Too Many Mistakes,' Says Hickey

What can a coach say when he's just lost a game by a 31-0 score that he came to win?

"We didn't play a very good game," said Coach Jim Hickey in a voice husky from a cold that had him reaching for Kleenex all afternoon.

"We made too many mistakes that cost us dearly. Michigan State made the most of them. And that's the sign of a good ball club."

"Our passing game simply didn't hit the mark," he said literally. "The first half had us hopeful. We hadn't played well, we were behind, but we were still here we could make a comeback."

Coach Hickey paused, thought back and then continued, "Then right at the start of the second half, we began a series of mistakes that ended up with us looking like Santa Claus."

"The first of these was the turning point of the ball game from our point of view. Bill Edwards was back to punt on fourth down. He got in trouble and decided to run. Michigan State took over deep in our territory, ran the score to 17-0 and that was the ball game."

"We came here expecting to win and for the first 30 minutes we weren't changing our minds. Then the bottom fell out. Michigan State is as good as last year," Hickey concluded.

Across the passage Michigan State Coach Duffy Daugherty was his jolly winning self.

"We've got the start of what should be a representative Michigan State team. Of course, next week we play Southern Cal, the nation's No. 1 team, and that should tell us something more about ourselves."

"North Carolina was tougher defensively than they were last year — tougher up front. They contained our wide game much (Continued on Page 6)

Definition Sought On Construction

Town Manager Robert Peck will ask the Board of Adjustment to rule Tuesday whether the new structures in Rolling Hills are trailers or pre-fabricated houses. The Board meets Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the Town Hall.

The structures have been erected (or moved) onto two five-acre tracts adjacent to the Rolling Hills subdivision off Pittsboro Highway by developer Jack Carlisle. Residents of the area have complained to the Board of Aldermen that Mr. Carlisle is operating an unauthorized trailer park in violation of the zoning ordinance.

Mr. Peck concurs that Mr. Carlisle has set up a trailer park in violation of the zoning ordinance, but Mr. Carlisle contends that he has done nothing more than erect two five-unit apartment buildings, plus a three-bedroom house.

Mr. Carlisle said yesterday that the structures are actually pre-fabricated homes, transported by trailer. He cited two letters from the general manager of the Magnolia Mobile Homes Corporation, of South Hill, Va., manufacturers of the units, in support of his argument.

The letters stated that the Federal Housing Authority and numerous banks had accepted the structures as houses and had granted conventional home mortgages on them. The difference between the units and normal pre-fab houses is in the method (Continued on Page 2)

Cooper Is Elected As YDC President

Chapel Hill attorney Robert Cooper was acclaimed president of the Orange County YDC for the coming year Friday.

The YDC elected officers Friday night at a meeting in Hillsboro. Also chosen by acclamation was Mrs. Helen Laws, from north of Hillsboro, as first vice-president. Chapel Hill attorney Barry Winston defeated Mrs. DeLos O'Daniel of Carboro for secretary-treasurer, and Miss Ruth Privette of Hillsboro was elected second vice president over Mrs. Willard Oakley.

All officers assume their positions officially at an installation banquet January 1.

The YDC endorsed U. S. District Attorney William H. Murdock of Durham as successor to Federal Judge L. Richardson Preyer, who will resign to run for Governor.

The YDC also commended Senator Sam J. Ervin "for his forthright stand against encroachment of the United States federal government in the field of government reserved to the states."

Present YDC president Fred Cates Jr. of Hillsboro, criticized former State Democratic Party chairman Bert Bennett for his estimate of I. Beverly Lake's and Judge Dan K. Moore's respective chances of winning the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

"The past chairman of the Democratic party in North Carolina should be utterly condemned for his statements," Mr. Cates said.

Orange Rep. Edwin Hamlin asked for YDC members' comments on the special session of the Legislature, to be held in October on State Senate redistricting. Mr. Hamlin has already stated his support of Governor Terry Sanford's redistricting proposal.

Orange County Democratic Party Chairman L. J. Phipps urged the YDC to get persons in the 19-23 age bracket active in politics.

O. W. Holmes Talks Start On Tuesday

By PETE IVEY

Three professors of law will preside at the Oliver Wendell Holmes Lectures Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday in Carroll Hall auditorium at 8 p.m. each evening. Harvard Law School Professor Arthur E. Sutherland will be the speaker. The public is invited.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will preside Tuesday night when Professor Sutherland speaks in "Social Statistics and a Restless People."

Dean Henry P. Brandis Jr. of the University Law School will be chairman Wednesday. Prof. Sutherland will speak on "Education in the Obvious."

Prof. Dan Pollitt, a member of the Law School faculty here and a former student of Prof. Sutherland, will preside Thursday evening when the speaker's subject is "To Grow More Civilized."

The University was selected as (Continued on Page 8)

TOWN and GOWN

By PETE IVEY

You never think much about the University being a denominational school. But people from all kinds of religions are here — and they practice what they preach too. Chapel Hill church congregations are swarming with students.

The former pastor of the University Methodist Church, Charles Hubbard, used to say that the large enrollment at Chapel Hill makes the University the biggest Methodist School in the State — outnumbering all the Methodist colleges in the state. UNC has more Methodists than there are Methodists at Duke, for instance, said the Rev. Mr. Hubbard.

"We also have more Baptists than there are Baptists at Wake Forest," he said.

The nearly 11,000 enrollment here this year probably means likewise that the University has more Presbyterians than there are Presbyterians at Davidson, more Catholics than any other college in the State, more Lutherans, more Jews, more Episcopalians, more Hindus, more Buddhists, more Moslems, more Confucianists than any other (Continued on Page 2)
