THE ELECTIONS.

The importance of the recent Democratic gains in Arkansas, Vermont and Maine are not to be underestimated or belittled, howsoever much the Republican press may effect to appear satisfied or try to explain them. The reduction of the Republican vote is extraordinary, and cannot but be the forerunners of certain Democratic victory in November. A Philadelphia Republican paper remarks that a Republican majority of 11,000 in Maine is "entirely satisfactory." UNDER the new management, the Well, the Republicans must be very easily satisfied. THE MAINE ELECTION.

Vermont's election returns showed a Republican loss of about 10,000 votes while at the same time the Democrats made a slight increase. Now in Main the returns show a falling off of over 33 per cent. in the Republican vote, and Democrats are elated everywhere. There is, in tact, every indication of a landslide that NORTH CAROLINA ought to be one will cover up the Republican party of the great fruit-producing States under a mountain of its own debris. of the Union.
