New Laws "Unworkable" Provisions Deliberately Designed, Says Padway

continued, by a provision in the Taft-Hartley Act which tells employers they do not have to "make any concessions."

The AFL counsel discussed at great length the various aspects of the union security provisions under the law and advised the union representatives of the hazardous penalties they can become liable to if they seek and obtain authorized union-shop agreements. Chief of these, he pointed out, is the elimination of any union authority to control its membership, except for non-payment of dues or initiation fee.

The law, at the same time, makes the unions liable for the acts of its members, even though such acts may not be authorized by the union, he said.

The Taft-Hartley Act reads a "funeral oration" for boycotts, Mr. Padway continued. He said the framers of the Act deliberately inserted provisions designed to prevent one union from coming to the aid of the other in case of strike or dispute.

Injunctions can be issued wholesale against unions under the Taft-Hartley Act, Padway asserted. Never before have unions been faced with such an emergency situation, he said. Before the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which ended all injunctions in labor disputes, it was discretionary with the courts whether or not to issue an injunction against a union on the application of an employer. Now, he explained, under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, the NLRB is "commanded" to apply for injunctions in the courts, thus making the Government an agent for employers. But if an employer commits an unfair labor practice, the Board may seek an injunction or not, in its discretion. Such discrimination is "dastardly," Padway charged.

In a brief reference to the section of the law prohibiting political expenditures by unions, Padway stated flatly that this provision is unconstitutional.

"The American Federation of Labor has violated that section already," he said "by printing the roll-call vote on the overriding of the President's veto. I'm glad they did. This provision is patently unconstitutional and I don't think it can be held otherwise by the courts."
