

Democratic Trade Unions To Form New Pan-American Labor Group

Washington, D. C. — A hemispheric labor organization composed of democratic trade unions in North and South America will be organized next January in Lima, Peru, according to press reports.

Labor unions and federations from 17 countries, including the American Federation of Labor, are reported to have signified their intention of joining what probably will be known as the Pan American Federation of Labor.

The new organization will seek to rival the Latin-American Confederation of Labor (CTAL), which is regarded as Communist-dominated.

Although the Pan American Federation will be started with relatively little strength in the Latin-American countries, it will have the financial and moral support of organizations in the United States and Canada. The Canadian Trades and Labor Congress leaders have assented to the formation of the new organization.

Unions disassociated from the CTAL are not federated in some Latin-American countries. In those cases the delegates will be direct representatives of their national unions. According to word received here, no union regarded as Communist-dominated will be invited.

The AFL has favored the establishment of such an inter-American labor body for several years.

For many years the world labor movement was identified as the International Federation of Trade Unions. It was dominated by the British Trade Union Congress and the AFL and excluded the Soviet Union. The British took the lead two or three years ago in forming the WFTU. The admission of the CIO and the Russians resulted in an AFL decision to boycott the new organization.

The AFL has retained representation in the international labor organization, to the exclusion of the CIO. This is not strictly a labor body, being made up of employer and government representatives as well as those of employees. The AFL also has retained fraternal relationships with unions in Britain, Canada and a few Latin-American countries.

59,220 VETS RECEIVING ON-JOB TRAINING IN N. Y.

Albany, N. Y.—Edward Corsi, New York Industrial Commissioner, reported that 59,220 veterans are receiving on-the-job training in programs sponsored by 13,120 employers throughout the state.

Mr. Corsi said the State Labor Department is supplying to employers special "certificates of completion" to give veterans who have satisfactorily completed the training courses.

Under Federal regulations, employers must give a certificate of this type to each veteran completing an on-the-job training course. Mr. Corsi said the state agency would make the forms available without cost as "a small gesture of appreciation" to the employers who were co-operating in the program.
