are securing valuable battle experiences in Korea. The longer the minor war continues, the greater the number of experienced fighters we will have for the major conflict.

The reader should not lose sight of the primary facts in connection with the Korean venture. The fighting was precipitated when the North Koreans attempted, against the decisions of the United Nations to invade South Korea and consolidate all of Korea under a Communist regime. The United Nations employed force to stop this aggressive enterprise and, up to date, they have been eminently successful in thwarting Communist ambitions. This is a great gain for us. It has been accompanied by the infliction of terrific losses upon the Communist fighting forces.

Uncle Sam Says

Make today your "D" Day. Today as never before the thrift dollar is a defense dollar. The dollars you save today are building power for the nation. No one can escape the fact that defense is everybody's job, whether it be in uniform, in a defense plant or in providing defense dollars. You should sign up today for the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or the Bond-A-Month Plan at your bank. Either way your savings will work for freedom — your country's freedom and your own future freedom. U. S. Treasury Department

International Sunday School Lesson For September 23, 1951
MEMORY SELECTION: "Have we not all one father? Hath not one God created us?"—Malachi 2:10.

Lesson Text: Isaiah 65:17-25; Acts 17:24-28.

Narrow nationalism was the curse of the world in the days of Isaiah and of Jesus and of Paul, even as it is still today. Every nation was convinced that it was the finest nation, the noblest in the world. The Jews believed themselves to be the "Chosen People" of God, which they were, but their actions did not match their contention. Isaiah criticized them for this and, certainly, Jesus disliked their attitude in this respect.

Isolated, bitter, armed to the teeth, proud, cruel and narrow-minded was the world into which Isaiah, Jesus and Paul were born. They were all jeered at, persecuted and even slain by those who denied all brotherhood with those of other nations. Only recently, and then only in part, have some nations cast off their fatal isolationist nationalism to move out on equal footing among the nations of the world.

Isaiah looked forward to the day when brotherhood should reign over all the world. He hoped the time would come when the fierce passions of hate and destruction would be subdued by the power and grace of God. When the day arrives, there will be the joy, a sense of security (so absent today) and peace will pervade the earth. The human life span will be increased because of these improved conditions and there shall be no more war, and weeping and weariness. Isaiah also prophesied that there should also be more intimate fellowship between God and man.

How shall this come about? Scholars do not agree. Some expect it at the second coming of Christ, while others believe that it will come about through the process of love, enlightenment and regeneration as a result of the preaching and practice of the gospel of Jesus Christ. However it comes about, Christian responsibility is the same. Each Christian should do all in his, or her, power to bring about a world of peace, plenty, and the reign of God's power in the lives of men.

Paul's message has much meaning for our day. He presents God as ruler and owner of the universe, who has been working through nations and their peoples to accomplish His will. Paul declares, "He has made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." This concept of "one blood" has not been generally accepted by the people of the world.

It is said that the Koreans have a humorous legend. Although it is legendary, it has a sharp point to puncture the theory of race supremacy, particularly our white pride: It goes something like this:

When the Creator first made man, he mixed just the proper ingredients, poured it into a mold, and put the ingredients into the oven to bake. Upon the first trial he left man in the oven to bake. When he took him out, he was too black. But God didn't throw him away. He used him to start the Negro race.

Then the Creator mixed another batch of material and put it in the oven. This time he took it out too soon. He was disappointed that it was not dark enough, but he didn't throw it away. He used it to start the white race.

But the third time the Creator was entirely successful. He took man out of the oven at exactly the proper moment. At last he had succeeded in making a man just the right color—yellow.

From a Korean's standpoint, this is a good story, but each race is guilty of the same racial "pride," and has its own way of saying, "We are superior." While most of us are big enough to laugh at these absurd prejudices and unfounded assumptions, do our actions towards others dispel their feeling that we think we are superior? Let us remember that wherever the gospel of Jesus Christ is truly preached and practiced, it inevitably leads in the direction of true Christian brotherhood.
