trade union principles, policies and philosophy." Of course, both these proposals do not touch upon the heart of the problem—labor's role in the making of American foreign policy. That field remains virgin territory, notwithstanding valiant efforts of the national bodies of organized labor to break through the silk or striped pants curtain and bring some hard common sense into the council of government.

Labor's latest effort in this direction came recently from the CIO which, through its international relations committee, voiced a strong plea for union representation on a policy-making level in both the State Department and the ECA. More "shirt-sleeved diplomacy" is required in working with the wage earners and plain people in areas most threatened by communism, the committee spokesman rightly said. State Department planners "haven't the feel of what hurts the man in the street abroad."

Perhaps the new bossman of the ECA (now known as the Mutual Security Agency), Averell Harriman, will be amenable to these suggestions. If so, a substantial step in supplementing the splendid work of AFL's Irving

Brown and others in Europe will have been taken.

Trust a radical liberal in power to propose reforms that would make an out and out conservative blush.

The most recent example is India's Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru, an old-time socialist and public-spirited servant of the people. According to press dispatches from New Delhi, he submitted to parliament an outline for the country's economic development through greater exploitation of India's abundant manpower, perhaps by compulsory means such as labor conscription.

Although Nehru shied away from openly commending compulsory labor, he acknowledged that some such measure might be necessary and beneficial. In proof he pointed to the "mental rut" of the Indian people, the ancient caste system, and overcrowded occupations in overpopulated areas, while other occupations and immense tracts of nonproducing farm land cry for development.

All of this is true. Nehru is also right in stating that India's "social life has to undergo a change to fit in with modern economic conditions and to be able to help the change-over to greater wealth production." Yet to hear the successor to Gandhi, inveterate

Let them not have died in vain

ON ARMISTICE DAY, 1951, let us resolve that every day will be a day of remembering the men who died for us in Korea. And the lesson they gave their lives to teach us: peace is for the strong.

We must make it clear to all men of all nations that no possible gain can come from aggressive action. That we have built and are maintaining a superior strength. And that we stand ready to use that strength whenever our rights or freedom are imperiled.

We must build for our war dead a monument of strength which shall be, in turn, a monument of peace for our generation and those to come.

***

There is a job for peace that you can do. It's this. Back up our defense forces, and help keep America economically strong, by buying United States Defense Bonds. Buy them regularly—through the Payroll Savings Plan where you work or the Bond-A-Month Plan where you bank. Start today!
