Put Skill Where It's Needed—AFL

The United States needs a more orderly system to bring about speedy full mobilization in case of war, but such a system should not put men into military uniform who would be essential in the defense production program.

That's what George D. Riley, member of the AFL national legislative committee, told the Senate Armed Services Subcommittee as he testified in connection with H.R. 4526.

Should Be Amended
H.R. 4526 would set up a system of armed forces reserves. It should be amended, the AFL advised, so that persons "with critical skills and talents would be subject to some type of selective review before they are called to active duty."

"We suggest," the AFL spokesman said, "that this review be conducted by an independent civilian agency or board."

Riley pointed to "the danger of calling up of reserves indiscriminately without regard to whether members of the reserve possess rare or difficult-to-recruit skills," by pointing out the experience of France in World War I, as related to the House Committee on Military Affairs some years ago by William C. Hushing, chairman of the AFL National Legislative Committee.

"By the time the French ferreted out the mechanics in the ranks," it was said, "5 or 6 months had gone by and production of munitions was delay that long."

The new measure would set up a Reserve Corps of 4 1-2 million by 1960. With this objective, said the AFL representative, the AFL is in complete sympathy, and offers full support, but it may well be that some persons "would be serving their country better if they remained in civilian life than if they were recalled to active duty."

Critical Occupations
The Labor Department, it was pointed out, has established a list of critical occupations. Included in this list are certain scientific and professional occupations and in addition, a number of basic skilled industrial occupations such as tool and die maker, ship-fitter, pattern maker, machinist, design engineer draftsman, and millwright. This list could serve as a guide, Riley said.

AFL SPRING FAIR
Long Beach, Calif.—A circus complete with wild animals, clowns and daredevil acts was only part of the AFL Spring Fair here. There were displays of union-made goods, a carnival, music, prizes, and beauty queens, heralded by a parade of elephants.

Price controls were suspended by the OPS on raw cotton and practically all textiles, including those made of wood, cotton, and synthetic fibers. All have been selling far below ceiling. Officials said this will not probably affect retail prices for the fabrics.
