SHADOW OF THE WORKINGMAN.

Behold the swiftly flying boat!
In conscious might it steams along; With graceful lines and power ul frame It proudly bears its living throng. To dstant lands it ploughs its way, And to the many wealth doth bring ts tidings from the absent friends; Are welcome as the smiling spring, ou see it cleave the restless wave, And know old ocean's space 'twill span But, cast o'er all, can you behold The shadow of the workingman?

See, on the locomotive rush With headlong speed o'er iron road, Like living, breathing mons'er, whom Some unseen powers onward goad, Through cities, towns, and shady dells, O'er gurgling streams and woodland

t speeds you on with clang and roar; Ay, 'neath the mountains' glooms shades

With ease it quickly bears along Pilgrims of every tribe and clan : But o'er each fleeting view dost see The shadow of the workingman?

Come, gaze upon this mighty pile, Kissed by the setting sun's last ray, As gently chime the distant bells , Come view its grandly massive walls, It's pillars, halls, and arches true, Which are so neatly, deftly wrought Without one flaw to meet the view, er all this blended strength and grace, As round it zephyrs gently fan, Can you not see, in outline bold, The shadow of the workingman?

io seek the lofty mountain height, And there behold the glowing scene-The forest, field, and waving grain, The rippling lakes, the meadows green Each beauty of the prospect view, All thronged with useful, busy life,

Where once the gloomy wilds were seen Where savage revels once were rife, do, look upon all earth's broad face, Replete with art and nature's plan; And there, in bold relief, you'll see The shadow of the workingman.

Darwin and His Work. [For The Commonwealth.]

In this brief sketch of the late Charles Darwin I propose to treat only of some personal traits, of his method of work, and the general character of his researches, without any effort to set forth his doctrines as a scientist. Any account of him in the coulmns of a newspaper, however carefully prepared, could not be otherwise than imperfect Could I only incite the readers of this shor. notice to seek the truth in the realm of nature, the purpose of this sketch would be amply served.

A scientist properly has to do with facts: he reasons from the known to the unknown. From the half-erased track on the sand of the beach he infers the presence of the animal that placed it there. From the broken fragment exhumed, it may be, from its covering of earth, he constructs the perfect form that he speaks its original anatomy. Facts first; then principles. When the young Darwin at the age of twenty-two was ap pointed naturalist to the Beagle and started on his five years' voyage around the world, he then began that long series of observations which gave him the facts and furnished the data from which resulted conclusions that have revolutionized all modern scientific thinking. This voyage was his scientific schooling preparatory to the great work of original in vestigation. He here had favorable opportunity for studying nature in a creations everywhere appeared. His ont of which grew the products of his long and laborious life. Aside from things of more permanent value to science, as a result of this journey

Mr. Darwin wrote one of the most instructive an intertaining books of modern travel. It is with the "Origin of Species' that Mr. Darwin's name is most gen erally associated, a book about M.
