Farmers Must Read.

An intelligent farmer in the community said to us a few days ago that there is a great need for farmers to study their business more Dr. Collins, the Chairman ex officio, closely with an eye to learning more about what other good and intelligent farmers think and do.

We were very much impressed with the truth of the remark, and we hope to see the time soon come when the great mass of our farmers will wake up to the fact that there is much to learn in their profession. The old way of doing things is passing away in other things, and farmers must make themselves intelligent by constant application, both in study and experiment, if they would keep up with the world that depends upon them for sustenance.
