CONVENTION NOTES.

Two gentlemen while speaking addressed the convention, "gentlemen of the jury."

Judge Fowle while speaking to the convention, in referring to the advertisement of the Blackwell Tobacco Company...

It was said that the convention was the finest looking body of men ever assembled in North Carolina.

The Democratic platform adopted by the convention shows some of the sound Democracy of those two sterling Democrats...

At a point of some confusion in the convention, a gentleman rose and said the National Convention at St. Louis would meet and adjourn before delegates could be appointed...

The balloting was so stubborn some one said it would be November before we got through the convention.

Loge Harris harked when Fowle was nominated just like the rest of the white men.

The most patriotic soul this series met during the days of the convention was Mrs. F. W. Smith, proprietress of the Exchange Hotel.

Of Mr. Gulger's speech in nominating Major Stedman, a gentleman of Fowle's preference in Raleigh said that if ever he should want an office, he wanted Mr. Gulger to nominate him.

The Convention was the most sober concern of the kind that has ever been seen in North Carolina.
