How Would This Do?

If the South were able to do it could it not be greatly benefited, and that right early, by manufacturing most of its products? Suppose the thing could be come at in this way:

Let the whole South plant very little more cotton, for instance, than could be manufactured here. Let every State manufacture the greater part of its own product, and sei mone to foreign manufactures unlesthey would move into the South to manufacture pools.

If this could be done our South land here would flourish as the green buy her, and our restrances would be developed beyond what the most sangame could expect. Now, car the South do this? Well, the South can do semuthing, and that something must be done. Much is being done now and the spirit of progress is everywhere moving its slow but steady wheels; and the day is not very distant when ours shall be a land of plenty and to spare.
