Little Deeds.

HY d. W. EVERETT.

Tis not the greatest acts of life That give the greatest pleasure, Nor the largest gem 'neath the casket's lid That we count for richest treasure, Tis the little deeds, live stars at night. Embedded in azure blue. Chat lend to life its brightest light

Of a pure and radiant hue. And Leften think as I sit alone In the evening calm and still, If the deeds of kindness we all might do If we had only the will.

It may be only a smiling look To a worn and weary soul. Or a cheering word to the heart depressed More precious far than gold,

It may be only the press of the hand In the clasp of a sorrowing friend, Or a simple word of kindness given Or a helping hand to lend.

These all seem simple and little acts That cost us nothing to give. Yet their very being is a golden cord That runs through the life we live. And when at last like the gems in a crown

Our great and small deeds clustre. Tis the little acts I think will shed O'er the whole the purest lustre, Bichmond Disputch,
