SUSAN TEALL PERRY. The fire burns dimly on the hearth. The light is turned down low; And wintry winds through bare old trees In fitful gusts oft blow. The mother pulls the curtains down To keep away the cold: Tucks tightly in the children's beds, She's shutting up her fold. She covers up the little hand Thrown over the coverlet; she wipes the place on baby's check Which one stray tear had wet: Kisses the little ones who sleep And smoothes the hair of gold. Then kneels and "prays the Lord to keep. She's shutting up her fold. Mh. little ones, fenced round secure With mother's love and care, What looks of peace and trust and joy Your sleeping faces wear!
