The Departed.

Away in the lonely church-yard, Is the grave of one I love; Wi'd flowers around are scattered, And the willow waves above.

At eventide, the zephyrs Play softly o'er the scene, And the rays of northern starlight Peep through the branches green.

No sound disturbs the stillness-The quiet is supreme; And the lonely spot seems holier In the moonlight's mellow gleam.

By the graves of the departed The heart is deepest stirred, And the harp of universal love With the soul's best hopes accord.

From the graves of the departed We pass with thoughtful face --And vain, and light, and heartless things For holier thoughts make place Winstead, N. C. RAMBLER.

> He inquired of every one around the premises, but could find no evidence that anyone had interferred with the lock, or had even entered the apartment since the remains had been placed there. The strangest part of the story is yet to come. When Mrs. Stonehill went to the room with her husband it opened as soon as she pressed the latch, and she was the only one to whom the door would yield. To the husband it was always locked, but to the wife the latch responded readily. The condition of affairs continued until the feneral of the elder Mr. Stones hill, since which the door has given no trouble.
