Wanted—A Little Girl.

(Boston Pilot.)
Where have they gone to—the little girls, with natural manners and natural curls, who love their dolls and like their toys, and talk of something besides the boys?

Little old women in plenty I find, Mature in manners and old of mind; Little old flirts who talk of their "beaux," And vie with each other in stylish clothes.

Little old belles, who, at nine and ten, Are sick of pleasures and tired of men, Weary of travel, of balls, of fun— And find no new things under the sun.

Once, in the beautiful long ago, Some dear little children I used to know; Girls who merry as lambs at play, And laughed and rollicked the livelong day.

They thought not at all of the "style" of their clothes, They never imagined that boys were "beaux"; "Other girls' brothers" and "mates" were they; Splendid fellows to help them play.

Where have they gone to! If you see One of them anywhere, send her to me, I would give a medal of purest gold To one of these dear little girls of old, With an innocent heart and an open smile, Who knows not the meaning of "first" or "style."

A Progressive Young Agriculturist.

(Washington Gazette.)
Pitt county has a scientific as well as practical young agriculturist in the person of J. Bryan Grimes, Esq., of whom the good old county should be proud. As a neighbor we are proud of him, even though he lives beyond the line. We had the pleasure of taking a look at his Grimesland farm this week, and it was a revelation. He has under cultivation, in addition to the farm near Washington, thirty-five horse crop. His cotton is splendid, the corn on his home tract is not so good as could be desired but the other farm shows the best corn crop that has been grown there for years. Every crop is in a fine state of cultivation, and his farming operations promise great success. His potato crop was excellent, but with railroad facilities, he tells us, he would have cleared at least a thousand dollars more on that crop. He is now curing tobacco, and such quantities of the bright and beautiful leaf we have not seen many a day. He has seven barns near each other and a large packhouse. In these he has already cured thirty-one barrels full, and will cure as many more. This crop of tobacco is so fine as we ever saw, except that the hail punched it considerably in some fields. Mr. Grimes farms on scientific principles. He buys chemicals and having studied his lands and the requirement of each crop, he mixes his own fertilizers at a cost of $28 per ton, for the same cost of $12.50. He tried a top dressing for potatoes this year, at a cost of $1.50 per acre, and there was an increase in yield of ten barrels per acre where it was used. These are only a few of the many interesting facts we learned while investigating the curing of tobacco at that magnificent old Southern manor, the home of the late Gen. Bryan Grimes.

"Golden Medical Discovery" cures those diseases which come from blood impurities—scorfula and skin diseases, sores and swellings. But does it? It's put up by the thousands of thousands, and sold to hundreds of thousands. Can it cure as well as though it had been compounded just for you?

Its makers say that thousands of people who have had Tetter and Salt rheum, Eczema and Erysipelas, Carbuncles and Sore Eyes, Thick Neck and Enlarged Glands, are well today because they used it.

Suppose that this is so. Suppose that a quick-witted man was far seeing enough to know that to cleanse the blood was to cleanse the life. Suppose that by many experiments, and after many failures, he discovered this golden key to health and that his faith in it for you is so strong that you can go to your druggists, buy a bottle, and if it doesn't help you, you can get your money returned—cheerfully. Will you try it?

The remedy to have faith in, is the remedy the makers themselves have faith in.

BEST DOWRY.

WHAT A YOUNG WOMAN SHOULD HAVE.

Character and Ability.
(Amer. Farmer.)

A writer whose mind is richly stored with good sense addresses the Country Gentleman as follows: Yet, after all, every young woman should have a rich dowry to take to her husband and her new home. What shall it be? First of all, a character as wonderfully beautiful as all the formative influences of her life can make it. Shakespeare speaks of modesty as being "the jewel in her dowry." Let her have a character founded upon virtue and ornamented and lighted with a loving heart and a cheerful disposition. These, in lofty wealth or deep poverty, shall bear her upon the crest of every wave, and their value be without price. Parents can never secure happiness to their children except by giving them the ability to meet its demands. This, money comes far short of doing. If there is any obvious truth in this, that happiness is a personal mental condition maintained inde, endent of circumstances. This cannot mean, of course, that a naturally or spiritually made happy persons cannot be made more and less happy by circumstances, but it does mean this: If a daughter is brought up to be, or allowed to be, selfish, exacting and eternally expecting more than she receives, she will not be happy though she owned half the earth and wore the engagement ring of the owner of the other half.

Next to character in value as a dowry is executive ability of some kind. If a few hundred, more or less, can be expended upon our daughters, let us give them some special education which will fit them for self support. A woman thus endowed is happier than one who is the recipient of a yearly income from a father's bounty.

It is needless to recite the names of avenues which are so deservedly popular and open to women, but we may name one or two especially suited to a woman's true, eventual living in a home as wife and mother. One is that of a trained nurse. What a blessing to any home and to her self! Yet only strong young women can take this course of instruction, and it is a hard life when made self-supporting. But it will always recommend itself to the brave, practical girl. There is a glorious movement well started and marching grandly toward health. It is physical culture, now so fashionable. A thorough course of instruction in this will fit our daughters for real life, and secure to their children "the right to be well born." There is a great demand for teachers in schools and colleges which can be turned to bank account or board as well as toward the perfect woman in physique.

Gold is good for what it secures to us, but after all, it is hard and cold, and its glitter is mostly in reputation. In reality how often it is quite dull and far less bright than pinchbeck.

A voice says, "to be sure, some people insist upon calling a drop of water on a red rose something more a poetic, but the 'dew drop' on the 'blushing rose' will not furnish us bread and shoe leather." And we must admit the truth of such a statement, but oh, for a glimpse of the beautiful—and oh, the hungry soul! "My mind to me a kingdom is!" What a dowry!

Happy Hooslers.

Wm. Timmons Postmaster of Idaville, Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that had feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of some place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, some town, says: "Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is run down and do care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. ## Papers in Iceland.

Although Iceland has a population of only about 70,000 the majority of these being poor in this world's goods, yet no fewer than eight papers are published on the island.

The majority of these are printed on excellent paper and with good letter press, one of them, the Fjaliskon (Mountain Mail), even has an illustrated literary supplement. Aside from the local news, the papers are filled with discussions on political and economic subjects pertaining directly to the affairs of Iceland.

The spirit of the articles are extremely, sometimes even offensively, partisan and personal. Not infrequently the place of the books is occupied with a learned discussion of some kind. Comparatively little attention is paid to the ups and downs of European or American affairs, these being reported but very briefly. One characteristic of these papers is that almost the entire contents consists of original contributions. Splendid translations also are quite frequently published. The whole population of Iceland is educated, the number of illiterates being extremely low; as a result these papers have an abundance of correspondents even among the fishermen and peasants.

Thank the Little ones.
(Household.)

They run on our errands, upstairs for our books or slippers, our troubles our new magazines; downstairs to tell the servants this thing or that; over the way to carry our messages, to the postoffice with our letters and parcels.

They leave their play or their work a dozen times in the morning to do something to oblige us who are grown-up bigger, stronger, and apt to be less absorbently occupied than they.

No game of politics, or business in later life, will ever be so important to the man as ball and top to the little lad; and no future enjoyment of the little girl will ever be greater in degree and in kind than her present interest in her dolls and her playhouse; yet Johnnie and Jennie fly at our bidding, arresting themselves in mid-career of the play which is their present work, and alas! half the time we quite overlook our own obligation to be grateful.

We do not say "I thank you!" And because we do not say it, we make it difficult for our children to be as polite, as simply courteous, as otherwise they would be by nature and the imitation which is second nature to all children.

Importance of the Shears.

A recent number of the Journalist takes the ground that the shears are quite as important at times as the quill. It says:

"A good many people do not know that an editor's selections from his contemporaries are quite often the best test of his editorial ability, and that the function of the scissors is not merely to fill up vacant spaces, but to reproduce the brightest and best thoughts and the most attractive news from all sources at the editor's command. There are times when the editor opens his exchanges and finds a feast for his eyes, heart and soul. The thoughts of his contemporaries glow with life. He wishes his readers to enjoy the feast and he lovingly takes up the scissors and clips and clips, and sighs to think that his space is inadequate to contain all the treasures so prodigally spread before him. Your true editor is generous, and will sacrifice his own ambition as a writer during such festive occasions, and it is of far more profit to his readers to set before them the original dish of delicacies with the label of the real author scribed, than to appropriate its best thoughts to himself, and reproduce them as his own. After all, the true test of a newspaper's real value is not the amount of original matter it contains, but the average quality of all the matter appearing in its columns, whether original or selected."

"PASS IT ON."

AFTER MANY DAYS.

HOW A KINDNESS WAS REMEMBERED FOR MANY LONG YEARS.
(Youth's Companion.)

After the close of the Civil War the North was filled with Southern refugees, many of them delicate women, reduced from affluence to poverty, and compelled to earn a living for themselves and their families. One of these was a niece of Jefferson Davis, a woman of unusual cultivation, who found a scanty and precarious subsistence by giving an occasional lecture before a country audience on Southern life. Scattered and shielded as she had always been, the struggle with the world was a hard one. Women were just beginning to appear on the public platform, and she was unknown and friendless; but bravely she worked on, asking aid from no one.

It was a cold, blustering January day in 1878 when, cold and shivering from an early morning drive in the rain, and with her thin wraps dripping, Mrs. H. entered the Boston train at a way-station. All the seats were occupied, some with bags, bundles and overcoats.

Trembling from weakness and weariness, Mrs. H. supported herself against the back of a seat as the train moved off.

At that moment a gentleman chanced to lower his newspaper, and caught sight of the black-robed woman. With a quick exclamation he sprang to his seat removed a valise from the seat beside him, and invited her to occupy it. As she sank down exhausted, he carefully wrapped his travelling rug about her.

She thanked him for his kindness and he, turning to her said: "Pardon me, madam, but you are not a Southerner?"

"Yes," she answered "I am. I suppose you know it from my speech; many people have done so."

"The accent is unmistakable," he replied; "but pardon me again, are you not a long way from home?"

"A long way indeed," she replied, and encouraged by his sympathetic voice and manner, she added, "I lost my all during the war, and as there is no money in the South, I came North to find means to support my fatherless children."

"And have you done so?" he asked in a kindly manner.

"After a small fashion," she answered. "I have occasional engagements to speak to country audiences on life in the South during and before the War."

"Did you speak last night?" he asked.

"Yes in N.," was the answer.

"And—I do not wish to be impatient, but I am somewhat in the same business myself, and I should like to know, that if you would not mind telling me, how much they paid you for your lecture?"

"Five dollars and the fare to and from Boston," was the response.

"Five dollars!" he exclaimed. "Why, I always get one or two hundred; and your lecture must be worth a great deal more than mine, for you can give facts. While I can only furnish opinions."

"Little as it is," answered Mrs. H., "I am glad to get it; I would talk at this rate every night during the winter."

For a while the man sat in silence, then putting his hand in his pocket drew out a roll of banknotes, and in a hesitating manner said:

"I don't want to be intrusive, but one of the articles of my creed is that a woman is entitled to the same pay as a man if she does the same amount of work. My price for a night's talk is two hundred dollars, and that sum they paid me last night at Z; now if you will let me divide it with you, I shall have had my share, and the thing will be ever, don't you see?"

After much wringing and many thoughts of her newly little one, Mrs. H. was persuaded to put the roll in her purse; but it was not until the end of her journey that she examined the roll and found it to contain just one hundred dollars.

Some years afterward she discovered her unknown benefactor was Wendell Phillips, and being then past the need of help, she essayed to pay the debt.

"Don't speak of it," said Mr. Phillips; "I had entirely forgotten the incident."

"That is very probable," she replied, "but I have never forgotten it; that money, and still more your words of sympathy and encouragement, was the beginning of better days; and now I am abundantly able to pay back the money."

"Pass it on, then my dear madam, pass it on to some one who needs it."

Connie's Day.

(Youth's Companion.)
A New York mother whose wealth, position and kind heart fill her life with social and charitable occupations, is how a chance word opened her mind to the fact of pressing duties at home.

"One day last March my little daughter Constance, who is twelve years old, came into my room as I was hurriedly dressing to drive to a directors' meeting of one of the charities in which I am interested. It was just after her birthday, and she had a game, one of her presents, in her hand.

"O mamma," she cried, full of eagerness, "this is the loveliest game; do try it with me!"

"Her request, in my haste and absorption, seemed trivial to me.

"Nonsense, Connie, you know I cannot," I replied rather sharply; "this is board day at the hospital, and I am shockingly late now."

"I was standing in front of the mirror, and saw in the glass how her face fell and light died out of it at my words.

"I wish," she said, wistfully, "you would sometimes have a day with me, mamma."

"The child's speech went through me like a knife. I had never received so stinging a rebuke. Was it possible that in the pursuit of other duties I was neglecting the one that should be chief? My drive to the hospital that morning was full of serious introspection.

"Connie has had her day ever since. Saturdays my daughter and I spend together, and no other engagement can draw me away that day, for the child looks forward to it all the rest of the week."

Multipied Individual Success the Secret.

(Durham Sun.)
While the South needs a many-sided simultaneous growth rather than an isolated development in particular sections, nevertheless it is the individual success multiplied, say a thousand fold, which produces the aggregate growth. In the make up of its progressive history every man should do his part and thus be entitled to share in the common benefit.

Individual success contributes to the general prosperity and where this idea dominates there is uniform effort for the common good. Every transaction has a two-fold relation, being directly allied with individual interest and remotely with that of the community at large. The former alone is generally recognized, the latter however prevails though its presence be ignored. A success in the improvement of his farm or in the making known the advantages, resource and possibilities of his own location and while thus advertising his few acres he is publishing those of his neighborhood, county and State thereby promoting the common welfare though bent only upon his personal interest. The unwritten law maintains, despite the restrictions with which individual effort would seek to limit. It is this kind of co-operation which is needed among the agricultural and all other classes of our southland. It will unite them in effort and lead them to build more widely than they plan in these days of rapid progress.

Strength of Spiders.

ONE THAT CAN PULL A FISH OUT OF THE WATER.
(Chicago Herald.)

The physical powers of the Tarantula, the popular running, ground or wolf spider, are well illustrated by an instance recorded in the proceedings of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia. The result, as reported, was achieved by pure strength and activity, without any of the mechanical advantages of a snare. Mr. Springer, while walking with a friend in a swampy wood, which was pierced by a lake three feet wide, was attracted by the extraordinary movements of a large black spider in the middle of a ditch. Closer examination showed that the creature had caught a fish. She had fastened upon it with a deadly grip just on the forward side of the dorsal fin, and the poor fish was swimming round and round slowly or twisting its body as in pain. The head of its black enemy was sometimes almost pulled under water, but the strength of the feet would not permit an entire submersion. It moved its fins as if exhausted and often rested. Finally it swam under a floating leaf near the shore and made a vain effort to dislodge the spider by scraping against the under side of the leaf. The two had now closely approached the bank. Suddenly the long, black legs of the spider emerged from the water and the hind ones reached out and fastened upon the irregularities of the sides of the ditch. The spider commenced tagging at his prize in order to land it. The observer ran to the nearest house for a wide-mouthed bottle, leaving his friend to watch the struggle. During an interval of six or eight minutes' absence the spider had drawn the fish out of the water; then both creatures had fallen in again, the bank being nearly perpendicular. There followed a great struggle, and on Mr. Springer's return the fish was already hoisted more than half its length out upon the land. It was very much exhausted, hardly making any movement, and was being slowly and steadily drawn up by the spider, which had evidently gained the victory.

Enormous Waste.

(N. Y. Morning Journal.)
The people of this city succeed in disposing of 47,000,000 gallons of intoxicants every year, that is, 1,554,000,000 drinks. If the big Cator reservoir at Forty-second street were filled with such beverages New Yorkers would empty it nearly two and one-half times during a year. If the big Central Park reservoir, having a capacity of 200,000,000 gallons, should be filled with liquor, beer, and wine, the consumers in the cities of New York and Brooklyn and the State of New Jersey would empty it in two years. New Yorkers spend over $70,000,000 every year for liquor, beer, and wine. There are in the city 7575 places licensed to sell alcoholic drinks. In order to exist the smallest one of these places must sell at least $10 worth of drinks a day. Many of the best bars take in $25 to $150 a day. At the Hoffman House, where one has to pay fancy prices to taste in the smiles of classic art, the receipts are fully $500 a day. Averaging all the bars in town they take in about $25 a day, or $7,000,000 a year.
