cents, post paid. Address J. H. Soule, The high esteem with which the young couple are regarded here was evinced by the crowded church which witnessed the marriage ceremony performed by the Rev. T. N. Ivey. The church was most tastefully and handsomely decorated under the supervision of Mrs. Edward chesp. E. Briton aided by numerous friends c the bride and groom. These were unlike any decoracions heretofore seen in the churches here, and were very much mimired. At the head of each isle were cedar covered arches and rising from their centres were large cedar covered candelabras, the top of the arches and the candelabras being filled with candles The chancel rail was covered with cedar, each end being ornamented with an immense candelabra, while in the centre was a large arch fashioned like those
