The great question with the farmers, is how to diversify their crops in such manner as to make the most

The culture of the sugar beet has not been discussed in this section much; but THE DEMOCRAT thinks the subject worth the consideration of our farmers. We give the following from a late number of the Baltimore Manufacturer's Record and hope our readers will note it well: "Whether or not sugar-beet factories will pay in the South will soon be demonstrated by the one now almost completed at Staunton, Vs. In other parts of the country they have been successfal, and the owsers of this one expect equally good results, and that they may have is our hearty wish. The beet-sugar industry has been developed but little in this country, not more than five or six factories having been erected, while in Europe there are many times this number and each year shows an increase. A beet-sugar factory means for the farmers in the neighborhood a market for one of the best-paying and eastest-grown crops they can plant The yield of sagar beets per acre varies from six to twenty-two tons, the average being about fourteen tons. Toese are worth from $3.50 to $5.50 per ton at the factory, depending 35 cars was wrecked, throwing 27 upon their condition and sugar contents. Taking the average at $4.50 and 15 tons per acre, the gross value of the crop would be $67.50 per scre. From the experiments and actual work of growing in various parts of the country, the cost of raising, including planting, cultivation, barvesting and all incidental expenses, varies from $1.20 to $2.60 per ton, with an average of about $2, or $30 per acre, leaving a net prout of $2 50 per ton or $37.50 per acre.
