After the Ball.

Monroe Enquirer.

Monday night there was a ball in a building near Hargett's Stables and, as usual, the ball ended in a brawl. About midnight the peace of all those living in the neighborhood of the ball room was broken by yells, screams, cries of murder, pistol shots, and other sounds connected with a midnight brawl. Men and women were all engaged in a general row, the cause of which no one seemed to know. There was no damage done except a few scratches and bruises. For a while it looked as if some one would be hurt seriously for one fellow was down and both sides were fighting over, him and he received the blows of both friends and enemies. As soon as possible the row was broken up, the ball was over, and several of those who had participated in the ball and brawl were in durance vile.
