A Sensible Agent.

Exchange.

An agent who had made a study of human nature stopped at a gate on Second avenue the other day and asked of a small boy digging plants out of the grass, "Bob, is your mother home?"

"Yes, sir."

"House cleaning all done?"

"Yes, sir."

"Got her new spring 'somed'?"

"She has."

"Children well?"

"Yes, sir."

"Father go away good natured this morning?"

"Yes."

"Then I guess I'll ring the bell and try to sell her a picture."

HEALTHY EXERCISE
—fresh air and proper food, help to keep a woman in good condition. It's health-giving for some weak and or lame down as they are by the ailments and irregularities peculiar to their sex.
They're easily helped, though, there's a remedy in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription—that will build up and cure every feeble woman. It's the prescription of a physician has been tested in thousands of cases, and never found wanting.
The only risk that's taken is that of the manufacturer who promises to refund the money if no benefit is experienced.
This "Prescription" reaches the origin of the trouble. Business, fainting spells, and nervous disorders, such as sleeplessness, chorea or St. Vitus's dance, depend upon the irregularities and displacements of the special structure—the "Favorite Prescription" cures by regulating and correcting these functions and organic changes.
Dr. Sage's Remedy positively cures Catarrh.

The Old Friend

And the best friend, that never fails you, is Simmons' Liver Regulator, (the Red Z)—that's what you hear at the mention of this excellent Liver medicine, and people should not be persuaded that anything else will do. It is the King of Liver Medicines; is better than pills, and takes the place of Quinine and Calomel. It acts directly on the Liver, Kidneys and Bowels and gives new life to the whole system. This is the medicine you want. Sold by all Druggists in Liquid, or in Powder to be taken dry or made into a tea.

TRUST IN GOD AND DO THE RIGHT.

The world stretches out before you, A field for your muscles and brain; And though clouds may often float o'er you,

And often tempests and rain, Be fearless of storms which o'er take you— Push forward through all like a man— Good fortune will never forsake you, If you do as near right as you can.

Remember, the will to do rightly, If used, will the evil confound; Live daily by conscience that nightly Your sleep may be peaceful and sound. In the strict path of duty ne'er waver, Let honesty shape every plan, And life will of Paradise savor If you do as near right as you can.

Though foes' darkest scandal may speed, And strive with the shrewdest of tact To injure your fame, never heed, But justly and honestly act; And ask of the Ruler of Heaven To save your fair name as a man, And all that you ask will be given If you do as near right as you can.

An Unknown Admirer.

Exchange.

About one year ago a pretty young lady attending Richmond High School received a package from a little town in Virginia containing a handsome and valuable diamond ring. Accompanying the package was a note stating that the donor was unknown to her and she would, perhaps, never see him, but that he admired her. The ring had engraven in it the word "Unknown."

The young lady graduated this year, and recently she received a package postmarked from a small town in North Carolina. It contained an elegant gold watch and chain. A note accompanying the present stated that her unknown admirer knew her birthday occurred about the middle of June and that the gift was intended as a birthday present. The enamored unknown took great pains to keep the young lady and her friends from discovering his identity.

He even carved out the numbers in the watch so the jeweler who sold it could not be traced. Neither the young lady nor any of her friends have the faintest idea as to who the knowing admirer can be, they not knowing any one in the towns from which the presents came.

Give the First Fruits.

A. R. Presbyterian.

"I cannot afford it but I can sacrifice it." This is a good way to meet the objections of our selfish natures to Christian giving. The rich man with his thousands and the poor man with his pennies hear alike the whisper from within "You can't afford to give." If we try to reason ourselves into believing that we can afford it, we shall likely be beaten in the argument. And if we give only when we have something to spare, the gifts of many of us will be about as scarce as "angels' visits." But this is not the true principle of Christian giving. God calls for the first fruits, not for what we can spare after meeting all our own wants. He calls to deny ourselves for His sake and to give to Him that which we need for ourselves. Whether or not gifts which are the fruit of self-denial do more good to the cause than gifts that can be spared, they certainly do the giver more good. Indeed no one can really taste the sweetness of giving without self-denial.

MR. DANIELS' POPULARITY.

Prospects Still Brightening.

Wash. Cor. to Richmond Dispatch.

Mr. Josephus Daniels, of North Carolina, seems to have a wonderful pull here, if all accounts are true. He was very well known in his own State before he accepted an official position under the present administration, but very few people who made his acquaintance after he first settled in Washington had any idea that he was such a hustler. Indeed, they rather looked upon him at the Interior Department as a sort of green "Tar-Heel." Shortly after arriving here he was made appointment clerk of the Interior Department, and he was so quiet that he struck the average Republican hold-over as being a mighty nice and easy one to get along with. But Mr. Daniel was not as quiet as they thought. He fairly made things hum, and so valuable a person was he to Secretary Hoke Smith that he soon had him transferred to even a better position in his department. He is now, and has been for many months, the chief clerk of the department. There is better pay in it, and the duties give Mr. Daniels larger scope for his work. He is a power in the department, and it is said that the Secretary thinks worlds of him. Secretary Smith is of North Carolina ancestry. The Hokes and the Smiths are more numerous in North Carolina than they are in Georgia, and a feeling of friendship for Daniels was but natural.

There was some talk of making Mr. Daniels Public Printer, and it is believed that Secretary Smith favored it. However, the old Public Printer, Mr. Benedict, was appointed, but Mr. Daniels appears to have a great deal of influence also with that official, who has so many positions at his disposal, and who is not hampered by civil-service regulations.

And the surprising statement is made that Mr. Daniels has been able to put more people into the Government Printing Office than any two Senators or Representatives from North Carolina. It is actually stated on what seems to be good authority that on the list which the Public Printer keeps of his appointments, the credit for a large number is given to Josephus Daniels.

Some people may not like this, but generally speaking, there is very great admiration here for this young North Carolinian, who has managed to do so much, and it is freely predicted by many of his ardent friends and admirers that if ever Mr. Cleveland is President again, or if the latter has any influence, with the next man who is President, Mr. Daniels will have a position in the government that will simply make the balance of the North Carolina Democrats green with envy.

These same friends of Mr. Daniels insist there is nothing narrow or selfish about him. He not only has done well himself, but he has put in some splendid licks for his friends, and he has gone heavy for North Carolinians. They contend that a man who thus sticks up for his friends is bound to succeed, and they look forward to the time when he will get up many notches higher himself in the service of his country.

Judges' Homes.

How the Members of the Supreme Court act When off Duty.

Although the supreme court of the United States is the most solemn body in the world, the nine men who compose it are not unlike other men when once they have thrown aside their robes and have said good-by for the day to the great judges' chairs.

All of the judges have comfortable home lives, and most of them own fine mansions in Washington where they must spend the rest of their lives by virtue of their office, which is for life. They receive an annual salary of ten thousand dollars, and after a few years of judgeship they fall into the easy way of thinking which was expressed to me by one of the most honorable judges himself "I have only my salary" and I spend every cent of it. But there is a big insurance upon my life and that will provide for the wife and children in perpetuity I think."

All the judges have families; and it has been suggested that, if the president were to appoint a judge who had never married, it would be putting a premium upon bachelorhood which would bode badly for the home interests of the country.

Chief Justice Melville H. Fuller was appointed by President Cleveland in 1888. He has a mansion on the corner of Eighteenth street and Massachusetts avenue. It is one of the largest houses in Washington, and it would be an easy thing to lose yourself in it. From the outside it attracts the visitor's gaze from its aristocratic and exclusive appearance. Inside the rooms are monsters. Every room on the ground floor could be used as a ball-room; and all are furnished in dark Oriental tapestries and hangings. Heavy velvet and Turkish carpets cover the floor, and when you walk the only sound you hear is your own rustle.

On the next floor is the chief justice's library; and it is by far the largest and most luxurious of any library of the justices of the Supreme court. It has eight windows, and you could easily divide it up into five very comfortable rooms. Judge Fuller's desk itself is a long solid flat-topped desk. The top is usually littered with papers and a stack of legal books. Between the windows and around every available wall space are book cases filled with precious volumes. And over the door as you enter is a life-sized portrait of the late Judge Blatchford.

Judge Fuller has eight children, seven daughters and one son. Three of the daughters are married, one is still in school and the other three are recognized belles of their set. The son is the baby of the family. He is only thirteen and goes to school.

Judge George Shiras, appointed by Harrison in '92, is one of the most pleasing gentlemen you will meet in a life time. Judge Shiras has a magnificent suite of apartments in the Arlington hotel on the third floor, comprising seven rooms. There is a fine reception room, a beautiful large parlor overlooking the park; and there are the judge's sleeping room, his study, his library and two rooms sacred to Mrs. Shiras. All furnished with things picked up in travel.

JUDGES' HOMES.

ment of which is his library, and to reach which you must descend a pair of stairs so dark and uncertain that you begin to fear they may cause a vacancy some day upon the bench. Once gained, the library is a dream of beauty, for it looks out upon a lovely garden. In the middle of the room is a desk, in the centre of which the judge sits, in such a way that he has a desk on three sides of him. A little way off sits his secretary, whom he keeps busy; and all around the room is a real museum of valuable books.

Judge Brewer has four of the handsomest daughters it was ever the lot of man to have. The eldest is Mrs. Jetmore, wife of a rich lawyer in Topeka, the next is Mrs. Kerriek, at Boston, and at home are Fannie and Bessie, the latter not yet out. Judge Brewer is twice a grandfather, though only 57 years old.

Judge Harlan lives in the most picturesque house in Washington. It is on top of the hill in Fourteenth street and over looks the city. The house takes in nearly a whole block and in the rear is a little garden where the judge works for his health. The house is furnished very much after the manner of all southern homes with the one idea, comfort. It also conveys the Queen Annie idea with its nooks and confusing turns.

Judge Harlan's family consists of Mrs. Harlan, three sons, Rev. Richard Harlan, John Harlan, a lawyer, and James. Then there are two pretty daughters at home, Miss Laura and Miss Ruth. The latter is still in school. Judge Harlan is sixty-one years old and a very handsome man. He has lived in this home six years.

Judge Howell Jackson, appointed by Harrison last year, lives in a very handsome house on K street. Unfortunately Mrs. Jackson has been south a great deal this winter, on account of the health of the judge, and the house has been closed. Usually there is a great deal of entertaining in the Jackson house and the judge and his family are very popular.

Judge Henry R. Brown began the new year well as on that day his lovely new house at 1720 sixteenth street was declared completed. It was copied after his Detroit home and can hardly be distinguished from it.

There are only two in the family, the judge and Mrs. Brown, who is somewhat of an invalid. She is a very handsome blonde.

Judge Field lives on First street on a great terrace, where he has a spacious house. The first floor is all reception and dining rooms, and the judge's library is on the second. Facing the judge's desk is a big bust of Homer, whom the judge quotes, and which he regards as his mascot.

Mrs. Field is a remarkably handsome woman and has been her husband's companion for forty-one years. Their happiness is, as the judge says, "forty-one years long." Mrs. Field has her sitting room just off the judge's library, and calls out "Stephen!" at least twice every hour. When I asked the judge his favorite recreation he smiled and hesitated. And Mrs. Field said: "I think your recreation, Stephen, is to keep right on working."

Judge White, the new associate, needs perhaps a little personal description. He is a young man for his position, being less than fifty, and he stands over six feet, with a chest like an athlete. His complexion is pink and white and his face smooth except for a pair of English "sideboards." His face gives you the thought of a big, overgrown baby.

Judge White lives in a secluded hotel up on the fifth floor and has only three living rooms. His library is very small and is fitted out with pine shelves, and there is a flat, plain table for a desk. The only ornaments to his den are three hotel chairs, a cuspidor, a waste paper basket and two windows.

That all are happy is evident. The judges have a grand position for life; and their wives are second to no one except the lady of the white house; and, according to Washington etiquette, they need never call upon another woman in Washington if they do not wish to do so.
