THE SPRING TIDE OF LIFE.

BY G. GROSVENOR DAWE.

To Young Men Once More.-Where, for months, in the Northern States The decision in the Day case has there has been chill and discomfort, the air has now begun to take on a milder character. There is the singing of birds and the joy of physical life again, so that earth and tree and creature throb with the knowledge that out of death and darkness of the winter there is to come the beauty of abundant life.

We talk of life as a mystery, but so also is death; for though death seems to end all, yet what is it but the death of rock and tree and creature that rendoubt, to be considered by the authori- ders possible all the wondrous and beauteous forms of life that now solace our struction of life. eyes, weary of dun and gray tints.
