PASSING YEARS

Look in your mirror today. Take a last look at your gray hair. It surely may be the last if you want it so; you needn't keep your gray hair a week longer than you wish. There's no guesswork about this; it's sure every time.

To restore color to gray hair use—

Ayer's Hair Vigor

After using it for two or three weeks notice how much younger you appear, ten years younger at least.

Ayer's Hair Vigor also cures dandruff, prevents falling of the hair, makes hair grow, and is a splendid hair dressing.

It cannot help but do these things, for it's a hair-food. When the hair is well fed, it cannot help but grow.

It makes the scalp healthy and this cures the disease that causes dandruff.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

"My hair was coming out badly, but Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling and has made my hair very thick and much darker than before. I think there is nothing like it for the hair." CORA M. LEA, April 25, 1899. Yarrow, I. T.

Points and Paragraphs of Things Present, Past and Future.

The senatorial contest is made more interesting in North Carolina by Governor Jarvis declaring his candidacy. He has many admirers throughout the State. With Simmons, Carr, Waddell and Jarvis in the field every Democrat ought to be able to get the man of his choice; and THE COMMONWEALTH believes that the great choice ought to fall on Simmons. It seems to us inconsistent for the Democratic party to choose any other than Simmons.

The death of a child in New Berne some two weeks ago under the practice "Christian Science", has brought that delusion prominently before the public and a vigorous denunciation of the practice has followed. The child is said to have died of fever from neglect because its parents and others placed faith in a young woman—Miss Hattie Harrison—who claimed to be able to cure through her "science." Some of the best and most eminent physicians in the State have given expression in the public prints against the practice; and the public has grown indignant as the enormity of the evil has been exposed.

Marion Butler is still practicing what Carlyle would call "vulpine sharpness.' He has been in Washington recently trying to make people believe that the Democrats of North Carolina are renegades. He says that the only way to stay the high-handed outrages of the Democrats is to resort to a shot-gun policy; and adds that he would not be surprised if "the people" should do so. Who are "the people," pray? Butler tries to leave the impression that the Populists and Republicans (all one now) are the people; but here in North Carolina some other folks regard themselves as "the people." Butler talks very glibly about these things at Washington, but in North Carolina he is a "small potato," and everybody knows it, and he knows that everybody knows it.

Every one deprecates a serious strike and the one now on in the Pennsylyania coal mines promises to be quite serious. Indeed, at this writing three days before we go to press, the news has come that lives have been lost in it. President Mitchell, the leader of the strike, has given out a card charging the blame upon seven railroads. He says they charge three times as much for carrying a ton of anthracite coal to tidewater as they do for carrying a ton of bituminous coal; and this works down the profits so small to the mine owners they can not properly pay the coal diggers for their work, and hence the strike. It is indeed a serious thing to have a hundred thousand people thrown out of employment, and perhaps more than that number are affected by the strike.

It is hoped that matters will soon be adjusted and the miners can resume work.

A very wise and thoughtful man, one who is a close student of passing events remarked recently that there is too much antagonism between the people in the towns and cities and people in the country. The city and town people do not take as much interest in the country people as they formerly did; and this in turn has caused the country people to feel indifferent towards town people.

By some means the country people in some places have come to entertain the belief that the town people are "down on them," and the town people have also come to believe that the country people do not entertain the best of feelings towards them.

This is all wrong. The city and town and country are mutually dependent upon each other. When the country thrives the town and city thrive; and what is in the main helpful to one is also helpful to the other. The very best of feeling ought to prevail between the people in the country and the people in the towns and cities This can be maintained by the proper treatment on all sides. Let us all do our best to keep up the best of feeling, for in this is happiness and prosperity for all.

Do Cows Cry?

Robt. A. Mills, in South Florida Sentinel.

Dumb animals are said to have a "sign" language of their own by which they make known the emotions of pleasure or pain, and a limited catalogue of wants and sorrows.

Recently I had occasion to dispose of a five-months-old calf, which was taken away about noon and butchered a short distance from my residence. When the cow came home at night she missed her calf, and although an orphan calf was permitted to suck, she continued to call it by affectionate mooing and looking. The cow, however, only gave about one quart of milk, instead of a gallon as formerly. During the night she lowed frequently for her calf, and the next morning when it did not appear she exhibited unmistakable signs of grief. The orphan calf was no solace to her. She was driven to the woods with her mate but came back and continued lowing until noon. She came inside the enclosure but would not eat grass.

Just after dinner a great commotion was heard in the direction of where the calf was butchered, made by a number of cattle lowing—having scented the blood. The grief-stricken mother-cow ran to the closed gate and looked beseechingly toward me, as much as to say: "Please open the gate," which, being done, she started on a run to where the other cattle were lowing.

In a short time she came walking slowly back to the house and was again permitted to come inside the enclosure, when she deliberately took up a position at the kitchen door, wistfully looking, in mute despair, at each member of the family as they happened to pass her, the tears flowed copiously from her eyes, and there she stood the balance of the afternoon weeping incessantly, with the same apparent grief that a mother would for a dead child. It really caused me to shed tears of sympathy for the poor animal.

We raised the cow and as she has always been a petted favorite it may account for her grief on this occasion, which evidently must have been more than mere animal instinct. Does it not closely approximate to reason?

[We are assured by the writer that the above is true to the letter.]

A man can no more be successful in a business he does not like than a man is happy with a wife he does not love

Enthusiasm is the power which impels men onward in any and every vocation. Without it men are lethargic. They will drift. But to pull against the tide they are as unable as they are unwilling.

Drifting, however, does not win the race, either in business or aquatic events. There must be the long pull, the strong pull and the pull with vigor.

The antidote for despair is enthusiasm for or pleasure in that business or vocation in which you are embarked.

Therefore, if you would succeed, get in love with your business.

The quicker you stop a cold or cough the less danger there will be of fatal lung trouble. One Minute Cough Cure is the only harmless remedy that gives immediate results. You will like it. E. T. Whitehead & Co.

A veteran who was boasting of his prowess during the civil war was asked, "How many of the enemy did you kill, anyway?"

"How many did I kill? How many did I kill?" repeated the veteran slowly. "Well, I don't know exactly how many, but I killed as many of them as they did of me."

SENATOR BEVERIDGE.

The New Senator From Indiana—How He Has Steadily Risen Through a Fixed Purpose Formed in His Early Youth.

(Concluded from last week.)

UNCLE BILLY BROWNING'S MISTAKE.

On one occasion, Bloomington was to have a meeting of the voters of three counties to close the campaign. It was to be one of the most important events of the contest. The committee sent young Beveridge. At that time the executive of Illinois was Governor Beveridge. The people of Bloomington thought it was he who was to address them, and they so advertised on sheets of circus size. The morning came. The committee, representing the greatness and dignity of the town and headed by "Uncle Billy" Browning, went proudly to the station. The train arrived and from it emerged a slender, white-faced youth. He carried a big valise. Not a soul spoke to him. He approached the first man, who happened to be Uncle Billy Browning, and asked for the best Republican hotel. Uncle Billy told him and inquired if he had seen Governor Beveridge on the train. Just then the youth looked across the road and saw the posters announcing the speaker for the great mass meeting. A case of stage fright was the result and he would have jumped on the train again had it not already moved off. Then he faced the ordeal.

"My name is Beveridge," he said, "and I was sent by the State Committee to make the speech down here tonight."

"You?" asked Browning, not believing his own eyes; and the other statesmen echoed the inquiry, "You?"

The situation was too strong for words. They all formed in line and marched uptown, nobody saying anything and the whole line looking like a funeral procession. Finally, the young man got to a room in the hotel and spent two hours in miserable uncertainty, but so long as he was there he was determined to see it out. He went to the meeting, which was a large one, but there was no interest in it for him. Browning absolutely refused to introduce him, but some kind soul took pity on the youthful stranger and got him before the crowd.

Browning declares it was the greatest speech ever made, and since that day there has never been a Republican campaign in that city during which Mr. Beveridge has not been the chief orator.

Numerous stories are told in Indianapolis of Mr. Beveridge's struggles to become a lawyer. He tried very hard to get in the office of Benjamin Harrison, but did not succeed. Finally, he secured a foothold with another firm. Those first weeks were full of hardship. Literally he lived on one meal a day for more than a month, and it was not until the end of three months that he received any pay. Twenty dollars a month was his first salary.

During the campaign he gave his services to his party. The legislature was to meet and there was a contest for the position of reading clerk. Young Beveridge was desperately in need of money to live on. A certain editor was to become chief clerk and he would have the appointing of this reading clerk. He did not like Beveridge and said that he would not appoint him if elected. Two others were after the position and each expected to get it. Nobody thought for a moment that Beveridge was in the race.

He drew up a paper and went personally to every member of the Legislature whom he had helped to elect, and secured the signatures of a majority. This paper was simply a notice to the prospective chief clerk that if he would not pledge himself to appoint Albert J. Beveridge reading clerk they would vote against his election. The consequence was that the editor quickly reconsidered his decision and young Beveridge was made reading clerk. And, to quote one who was in the Legislature at that time, "Beveridge read to beat the band all through the session."

A member of that Legislature was Charles Major, the author of "When Knighthood Was in Flower." Although a leading Democrat, while Beveridge was a Republican worker, they became very friendly.

MR. BEVERIDGE'S GENIUS FOR ORGANIZATION.

With a natural aptitude for public life, it is not surprising that the young lawyer should have extended his power and ambition. Those who know Mr. Beveridge best say that though he is an able orator his real forte is organization. In one of the recent campaigns in Indiana he carried this to a point which has probably never before been reached in American politics. It was a kind of endless chain scheme for every county, by which the candidates were kept going over the ground, one after the other, until not a spot or a subject remained uncovered. It would take considerable space to explain the method fully, but it simply kept everybody working systematically for the party, and it not only reached every voter but it pounded Republican politics into him from morning until night. In this campaign, from September 16 till November 9, Beveridge averaged only three and a half hours in bed each night. He was able to show this remarkable endurance largely from the fact that he has made it a point to take two months' vacation, in which he does absolutely nothing, every year.

When the opportunity of reaching the United States Senate came the conditions were not altogether favorable. The other United States Senator, the United States District Attorney, the Attorney-General of the State, the Collector of Customs and the Minister to Austria all lived in the same city as Mr. Beveridge, and every precedent demanded that the Senator to be chosen should come from some other part of the State. But Mr. Beveridge's organization was perfect. The young men worked for it. Business leaders and workingmen gave up their duties and devoted their efforts to his candidacy. There was no accident whatever in his election. It was all arranged for and thought out from start to finish, and it ended in complete victory.

A close friend of Mr. Beveridge is Mr. George W. Perkins, a prominent official of a great life insurance company. Like the Senator, he has won a high position early in life and from a low round of the ladder.

"I met Mr. Beveridge thirteen or fourteen years ago in Indianapolis," said Mr. Perkins. "I went down to that city from Chicago on business and accompanied a party of men under the direction of Volney T. Malott, on a trip on the Belt Line Railroad. Beveridge was on the train.

"'You two youngsters ought to know each other,'" said Mr. Malott in introducing us, 'and you ought to get along together first rate.'

"And we have done so ever since. While I was in the West and since I have been in the East we have corresponded regularly and met frequently. I was in Chicago when the Senator was chosen by the seperate branches of the Legislature and he wired me to come down and see him elected by the whole body the next day, and I did so. After he was elected the Senator made one of the nerviest speeches I ever heard a man make. It was thoroughly characteristic. He said to the legislators that he was not the Senator of Indiana, but that he was a 'Senator of the United States from Indiana'; that he would serve the country first and the State next. When he said this you could see shivers chase themselves up and down some Legislators' backs. Then he went on to explain that one State depended on the others, and that he served his State best who best served the Union. This made everything all right and the function ended as it began, with an ovation.

"I was probably the first man to whom the Senator mentioned his plan of a trip to the Philippines. He had been staying over night at my house in New York and we were walking across Twenty-third Street on our way downtown.

THE REASON FOR THE TRIP TO THE PHILIPPINES.

"'I am going to the Philippines,' he said suddenly. 'I have thought it all over. Every Senator who can go ought to visit those islands. I know that very few of them can do so, but I can and I shall. I want to understand the situation when I take my seat in the Senate.'

"Within a week he was on his way there. When he returned, he finished writing his now famous Philippine speech in my house. I had been down town late and when I got home I was not surprised to see a light in his room.

"'Get out of here,' he shouted; 'come back in an hour.'

"I came back and he had finished writing the speech. In addition to his industry, which is appalling, he is a very serious man. I came to realize this in a rather amusing way One night at a reception which the Senator and I attended soon after his election, the hostess said in mock surprise:

"'Are you Senator Beveridge—the Senator from Indiana?'

"The Senator bowed modestly.

"'It hardly seems possible! Why, you are a mere beardless youth!'

"'Madam,' replied Mr. Beveridge without a smile, 'I shave.'

"There is an incident connected with the Senator's legal career that never has been written. The life insurance companies were fighting the Indiana tax law several years ago and had able lawyers looking after our interests. But it was an important matter and I asked Mr. Beveridge's opinion. One day I got a letter from Mr. Beveridge inclosing a brief. He said he was convinced that the course we were considering was not the easiest that could be devised. The brief hit me hard, but I was afraid to trust my own judgment, so I sent it down to an official in another company, saying that 'it seemed to me it was a strong brief, but I was too close a friend of the lawyer to give an impartial opinion.'

"Half an hour later I was called to the telephone. The insurance man was at the other end of the wire.

"'I don't care,' he said, 'whether that Indiana lawyer is a friend of yours or not. We've got to get him into the case as quick as we can do it.'

"We did, and he won it, too.

"Perhaps another little story, not known to half a dozen persons, will illustrate a different phase of Mr. Beveridge's character. I was present when the incident took place. It was after his fame as a constitutional lawyer had come East.

"Mr. Beveridge was in my office when one of the best known lawyers in New York came in. He called to offer the Indiana man a partnership in his firm. The offer meant wealth within a few years.

"What did Mr. Beveridge do?

"He laughed at him. 'I don't want to be rich,' he said 'I have other ambitions!'"

JUST SO!

A newspaper can say nice things about a man and his whole family for two long years, and then incur their lifetime enmity in one short week by a seeming slight. Yes, it's a fact; and you can hurrah for a candidate, back his friends, cuss his enemies and make a big fool of yourself all the way through, without a thank in the end, only to find that when you are a candidate that he is "out o' pol'tics." But there is one man that does not forget you, and that's the man you opposed.—Anderson Intelligencer.
