FLAG ON NEW STAMP

Innovation to Be Introduced in Next Two-Cent Postal Issue.

The Portrait of Washington Will Occapy the Central Oval Resting Over the Background of the Draped Flag.

For the first time since 1869, and practically since the establishment of the United States postal system, the people will have the privilege of using a postage stamp bearing the flag of the republic with the issuance of the new series of postage stamps now in process of printing. The postage stamp displaying prominently the stars and stripes will be the 2-cent use to-day. Washington's portrait, which has appeared upon the common letter postage stamp since the beginning of the use of stamps exept during the single year 1869, when the portrait of Washington was displaced to make room for a wild and woolly, wide-stacked, wood-burning locomotive of the "rocket" type, will again occupy the position of honor upon the label, but the bust of Washington, so long familiar to the public will disappear, probably forever. The portrait of Washington, drawn from Houdon's profile cast, is abandoned, to be succeeded by a photograph Mrs. Johanna Soderholm, of Fergus from Stuart's famous painting, which

The first postage stamps issued by this government were the 5 and 10 cent denominations in 1847 bearing portraits of Franklin and Washington, respectively. The Washington picture was Stuart's. This portrait continued until 1870, with a few ex-Stuart photograph disappeared entirely, being superseded by Houdon's profile cast, which has been used ex-

The likeness of Washington is the most important feature of the design upon the new stamp, but the American flag-two flags, in fact-is conspicuous and inspiring. oval, somewhat smaller than the oval in the current stamp. Above this in panel are the words "United States of America" and draped upon either side occupying two-thirds the length of the stamp are two flags forming a name and at the side in small figures the dates of Washington's birth and death, 1732-1799.

TALE OF THE TANGLED TWINS

How Two Brothers Married Sisters and Very Shortly Got Hopetessly Bewildered.

"Well, sir," said Mr. Meddergrass to the visitor, "I reckon that about the funinest thing that ever happened in our town was the time the Higgins twins courted the Wiggins twins. And, to tell the truth, nobody is right sure how that it was so funny after all, because it might have been all right, as it was. You see the Higgins twins were boys and they looked so much ailke that neither of them knew which h was and the Wiggins twins was girl and they resembled each other to such an extent that their mother like to fed them to death for fear she'd beer feeding the wrong one all the time in stead of both of them.

"Of course, when the Higgins twin began courting the Wiggins girls i seemed just as it should be. But on night one of the Higginses called or one of the Wigginses and along abou ten o'clock the Wiggins girl wert into the sitting room and told her ma tha he had proposed to her and she didn' know whether to accept him or not because she couldn't tell whether h was the one that had been courting he or not. So old Mrs. Wiggins went int the parlor and explained it to the Hig gins twin and he said he was in th same fix himself, for he couldn't right ly say whether or not he had poppe to the girl he wanted or to the one h brother wanted. So they decided t let it rest and the young folks consid ered themselves half engaged, until few nights later the other Higgin twin-at least he said he was-cam along and proposed to the other Wig gins twin and then there was the sam argument all over again.

"But this time old man Wiggins too a hand in the dispute and asked the why not go ahead and get ready to b married anyway—said that the hand o fate would work it out all right, an they could trust the little blind go Cupid to know what he was about. they fixed up a big wedding-a doub wedding, of course-and people cam from miles around just to hang over the fence-them that wasn't invite And the minister got all mixed up while he was marrying the two couples, and finally he just sort of scattered his shots, as you might say, and got them all in a covey, so to speak, and tied them up in a bunch. Then every: Ly Charlotte body kissed them all around and congratulated them and themselves, too

"But pretty soon one of the brides got kind of hystericky and declared that she believed she had been married to the wrong twin, and then one of the Ar Portsmouth Higginses, that didn't know which of Ar Washington N. & W. S. B. the Wigginses he had wanted to marry, Ar Baltimore B. S. P. Co. or which one he had been married to Ar New York O.ID. S. S. Co. either, he got up and said he feared he had been united with the wrong girl and in about two minutes it was worse than a puzzle convention. The brides was a-looking at one another kind of suspicious, and the grooms was a-wrangling away with each other trying to decide which was which, and which wanted which, and, taken altogether, it was the rattledest crowd you ever saw. And the preacher-he tucked his double fees in his inside pocket and allowed that he must hasten on to a funeral that was demanding his attention. Just when the brides was getting around to the weep ing and wailing point, and the grooms was about ready to go out and get drunk and forget everything, a smart lawyer chap got up and said that the best plan was to arrange for a quadruple divorce, and then arrive at some sort of identification, and get married all over again, but separately and disthetly the next time.

"And do you know," continued Mr Meddergrass, impressively, according to the Baltimore American, "that dirorce case is still hanging fire in the court, because the judge can't tell which is witnesses and which is principals, and the would-be divorcees can't swear to it themselves. So I say Burlington 50. that it is about the funniest thing that ever happened down this way; but maybe it ain't funny, for there is just a chance that there hasn't been any mistake made at all. And: wouldn't everybody laugh if there hadn't on
