country is determined to have cheap means of transportation at whatever cost. When deep waterways have been effected, wherever possible, the railroads will, perforce, lower their rates. Our government has the right to regulate rates; but there is much to be considered before a radical change can be made. Circumstances in different communities cause variations. No doubt this agitation will lead to many new ways, and thus create circumstances which will do much to precede government intervention.

One who travels at all can easily realize that we are under the quiver of a great industrial advancement. It has awakened our oldest towns, built new ones, has no friends unless he holds his planted still more, and is arousing every little village. The growth is not cotton. You ask me why I know quick and abnormal, but permanent; for wherever buildings are being erected, in village or city, they are substantial.

It is history that the greatest of economic movements have not stayed the onward march of the world's progress. In the light of such precedent it is hardly believable that any economic problem an materially hinder the South's industrial momentum." It seems to us that this is the sensible view. All great political and economic movements are the culmination of years of agitation and growth. They start as the small mountain stream, but as the years go by they gather volume until they sweep everything before them. It is as useless for individuals to at much. empt to retard them as it is for the small boy to dam the turbulent stream. things. They may be hindered for a moment, but they finally burst forth and rush on with increased momentum. History shows that all great changes have net with opposition and incredibility; but in each case a gradual growth has had its culmination in final and overwhelming success. Thus it will be with our present rate movement! "You can't fool all the people all the James D. McNeill, of Fayetteville, is, or was recently, president of the Association of Volunteer Firemen of the entire country. H. B. Varner, of Lexington, is the head of the National Editoral Association. J. Van Lindley and John A. Young, of Greensboro, hold high executive positions in associations of nurseymen embracing the entire country in one instance and the South in the other. And thus literally it is true that where North Carolina sits is the head of the table." The above, from the Greensboro Telegram, is a pleasant truth to all North Carolinians! The Telegram's list is not nearly complete, had we time to hunt them all up. Not only industrially are our men gaining prominence, but in every line of human endeavor. Drinking in Public.

(Christain Sun.)

Had you taken time to observe that there is shame, if not scorn and disdain, for the fellow who dares to take a drink in a public place these days? Time was, and not long ago, when at a hotel, or a railway car, one did not hesitate to pass around the bottle and fill the air with the unhallowed perfume of strong drink. You do not see that in our times We have come to better ment must necessarily be destroyed.
