PROPER HOUSING OF POULTRY

causing entarth of Chief Requisites of Building Are Dryness, Perfect Ventilation and Plenty of Sunlight.

(By N. R. GILBERT.)

Frequently poultry keepers complain bitterly of the failure of their lowls to show profit, when the whole fault lies in defective housing. Poultry lead an entirely artificial or even when at liberty and provided with a sleeping-house-that is to say they have their food provided them and do not sleep in the trees, as their hatural instinct would teach them. It is simply the difference between sleeping in a bouse and sleeping in crees that upsets them. When they to the latter, they may not lay well but they keep their health. More than half the diseases modern fowls suffer lousing.

The chief requisites of a house are that it should be weather-proof, so that whatever the inclemency of the teason, the fowls keep dry. It must be provided with ample ventilation and should have a sunny aspect. The sun is life to all animals, and he more fowls get of it, the better. Yet, sometimes, fowl - houses are placed in dark, seeluded corners, and built to admit hardly any light. A

A trench should be dug to carry it away, or better still, there should be a spout on the roof to carry the wet away down to a down spout connected with a surface drain.

It is important that the ground around the house, as well as the house itself, be kept dry, as fowls never do well on wet land. Special attention should be paid to the roof. The enves should overlap some three incluse, and it is all the better if built of stouter wood than the walls. There is no necessity to cover the roof with felt, provided it receives a good dressing of far at first and a
