THE COMMONWEALTH

A Family Newspaper: For the Promotion of the Political, Social, Agricultural and Commercial Interests of the People.

VOL. XXXII.

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1916.

FIRST INSTALLMENT

CHAPTER I.

The Cryptic Coin. Kitty Gray, crack reporter on the Evening Star, pulled out of her typewriter the last sheet of paper and piled it on the little heap of finished copy which lay at her right. Then she closed her desk, stepped to the wardrobe and took her coat and hat.

Taking her little collection of copy paper from the desk, with the privilege of long tenure in office she walked to the desk of the city editor, who, although himself a married man, had all this time without success tried to look at the work before him and not at the trim figure of Kitty Gray making ready for her luncheon journey.

"When will you deign to return?" asked he with a certain lapse in journalistic dignity.

"When I have a better story than this guff-in the vernacular." Kitty's favorite lunching place was in one of the great department stores, where women were made welcome and comfortable, and she bent thither her steps; but midway in her journey she paused, as often she did, to gaze into the window of the little antique shop which occupied space in one of the unimportant side streets.

Kitty Gray's eyes were arrested by something that she saw-an object which she did not recall ever before close to the glass, just tinted back so Kitty Gray vos an oldt frent of mine.

"I'm down to the last words now. It is curious-a proper name. It is only the Latin name of the kingdom of Gretzhoffen! That's a little bankrupt kingdom over in southern Europe, near the Mediterranean. I know about it-I did a story about it once, the time the kingdom was trying to float a loan in this country. I had to read up a whole lot."

"I bet you could did it, Miss Cray," said Mainz, admiringly. "Vell; gootby. Come again und tell me vot you find out, like a goot girl."

"Sure," said Kitty, and turned to leave, her coin clutched tightly in her hand. So intent was she on her purchase that she did not notice she had dropped the package containing the shell-ribbed fan. Vaguely missing something as she emerged into the open air, she turned back, and almost ran into a man who had passed her as she came out. He was a foreignlooking individual, dark of hair and eyes and skin. strongly built, a figure such as one would note. He bowed now courteously enough as he handed her the package she had let fall. Kitty spone in some foreign tongue to the old dealer, who shook his head. I choost sold it-to dot young lady who yent out.

"Who is she? I know her very well. She is on der papers. , Better look out hension clutched at Kitty Gray's stout to have noted in the window. It lay or she put you in der paper sure. Miss that it might be the better seen. It She read like a book vot vos on the apparently was an old coin or part coin. Vy didn't you telephone-maybe dining saloon. But for some reason glance about the first little room, and [ then paused. The rug in the hall was turned over at one corner-was it by accident? The pictures all hung on the walls, yet several were askew, and-the little wall-safe back of one of the pictures-which had held some small objects of little value, an old daguerreotype or two, some silver spoons, a few gold pieces which she had cherished-had been broken open. Its contents now lay upon the floor. Amazed, Kitty stooped and picked them up, one by one. Nothing was missing-even the gold coins were there. Nothing had been harmed. But who had done this, and why?"

CHAPTER II.

En Voyage. The great liner Anne of Austria lay in her slip at the dock, her giant pulses just throbbing now and then. Everywhere men and women were hurrying to and fro in the customary orderly confusion of the last few moments before the departure of an ocean steamer.

Calmly Kitty Gray passed on her way to the boat's office and asked for her mail and her keys.

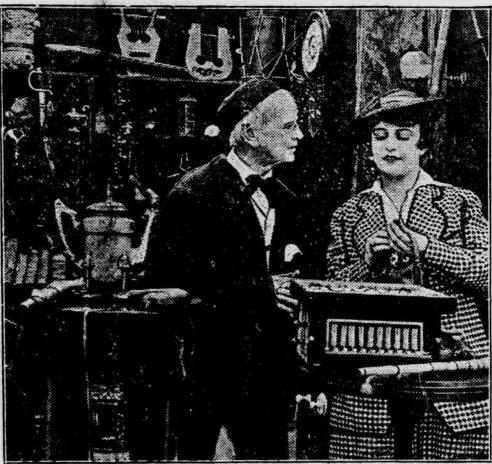

"As she turned, she almost stumbled against a man who had just hurried aboard-a dark man, thickset, foreign in appearance. She had the strange conviction that she had seen him before.

Then she turned to settle herself down in her quarters. So far as she knew, she had not an acquaintance on the boat.

Now, oddly enough, she recalled the face of the stranger, the dark-visaged foreigner whom she had met at the ship's office. Surely it must have been thanked him and hurried on her way. the same man who had handed her This stranger entered the shop and her package when she dropped it in the little antique shop! Why should he be on board this boat? Why should "No," said he, answering in English. he recognize her, remember her-for he had! Trust a woman to know that -he had-he did. Yes, he had known her. Again a cold feeling of apprelittle heart.

She rose and tried to fling off her depression by means of a visit to the she sell it back to you-I don't know. she felt she would be more comfort

"It's Odd, Isn't It?" She Said.

chamois 'bag was worthless-it had | was their oyster, and they opened it held only a kerchief, a bit of powder and scraped the shell. "Now, in case the Count Frederick, puff, perhaps a little silver-nothing more. Her real treasures-she knew the big plunger, or his man Grahame. where they were now. or the little King Michael the Sec-

The captain was outraged at what ond, should ever get hold of the rehe learned when at length she gained maining clue to the whereabouts of admittance to his cabin. With marine old King Michael's treasury-pouf! -you know what would happen then. precision, he acted at once. From that time on all through the voyage, a There would, Miss Kitty, to quote a certain American ballad, 'be a hot boat detective stood at each end of the passageway which led to Kitty's statetime in the old town' in that case." "It's a story!" said Kitty Gray, draw-

No trace of any other robbery could ing a long breath. But a troubled light came to her eyes at the same time. intruder could be identified. "How will a fellow dig it out?" she asked whimsically. CHAPTER V.

The Encounter. Meanwhile, during the interview Kitty Gray had with the American consul, him into the door of her own vehicle and followed him. "The Ritz, driver," she directed. And so, in the role of Samaritan, Kitty Gray made her second arrival that day at the stately hotel which she had selected as her own abode.

Rle t

All through the ride the man at her side remained silent, suffering acutely. He turned his face away. Again there came to Kitty Gray the strange feeling that she felt something which she ought to recognize, she could not tell what. In truth, sympathy had the better of curiosity for the time. She did not examine her strange companion closely, only speaking to him an occasional word of sympathy and assurance. Suddenly remembering that she did not know who he was, and remembering giso that her own conduct might be held as singular, she turned her companion over to the head porter of the hotel and hurrisd away to her own room.

Apparently the disfigured stranger remained at the hotel that night, for Department of Justice agents because when, at eleven of the following morning, Kitty Gray emerged, properly ar- American neutrality apparently has rayed for a morning ride, she saw the stranger in the hotel lobby, his face swathed in bandages. He seemed lution against the Carranza de facto to be waiting for her approach, spoke to her some words in a tongue which she did not understand-then changed to French-and then to English. "If mademoiselle would permit me."

he said, "I might be of use, even as I am. I know the city. Might I act New Orleans several days ago for Haas courier for the time? I would show my gratitude, if mademoiselle names have been associated with his regards it as proper for me thus to do Kitty Gray, actuated by no definite purpose, but governed by the impulse governor general of Vera Cruz, and which she trusted in her trade, turned suddenly toward the curb where stood her hired motor car, and motioned to the man to enter.

They passed on down the wide avenue of the capital, a strange couple enough. Kitty looked curiously about no evidence warranting his arrest had her, studiously examining everything been found, and as he left the country, she saw. Yes, the old city was beautiful, with its long lines of green trees, its stately edifices built by hands long any organized revolutionary movestilled in death. Soon she began to find the need of a guide, and unobtrus- been done to detain him.

ively the muffled figure at her side | General Diaz, a nephew of the forquietly suggested the information he mer Mexican president of that name thought might be of service. He point- has been absent from Mexico since Oaxaca, where Diaz is expected to launch his movement is the only state that has held aloof during the was here that I found you yesterday. fight of the past two years. Led by state officials the people declared their independence and Carranza and Her companion suddenly raised a other leaders were told that the state would be glad to resume its place in the Union whenever any one demonstrated that he had restored a stable central government.

NEW REVOLUTION

MEXICAN GENERAL IS SAID TO BE EN ROUTE TO NATIVE STATE.

NO. 9.

ELUDED FEDERAL AGENTS

Slips Out, of United States With Intention of Launching Revolution Against Carranza.

Washington .- Felix Diaz, who has been watched for several months by of suspected activities in violation of left the United States for Mexico with the intention of faunching a new revogovernment. Information reaching officials here indicates that he hopes to organize and lead the troops of his native state, Oaxaca, and such other forces in Southern Mexico as he can gather about him. General Diaz left vana, where several Mexicans whose in reports of a revolutionary movement were understood to be awaiting him. Theodore Dehessa, a former General Aurelioana Blanquet, war minister under Huerta, were reported to be among them.

Although Diaz eluded the federal agents detailed to watch him, department of justice officials said that since according to reports, as a private citizen of Mexico and not as a leader of ment, nothing probably could have be found, nor any clue by which the

CHAPTER IV.

The business of any true American at least some relation, of any caller

The Consul's Story. consul is to have known the father, or of one, curiously done in some dark metal, probably silver badly oxidized As Kitty bent down to examine it more closely, she saw that the coin bore an inscription, or what appeared to be such-an inscription broken across by the fracture which had di-"ideal the coin itself.

Her curiosity excited, Kitty Gray stepped into the little shop, whose proprietor she knew very well.

"Good morning, Mr. Mainz," she said with the customary newspaper inversion of the order of the day, "how's business? Any new fans, idols, coins-?'

"Coins? Vot? Sure, I got somet'ing new dot is olt. I choost t'ink of him. He iss only a part of himselluf. Should I show him to you?"

"Oh, maybe I saw it in the window," said Kitty, simling. "You mean the broken coin?"

"Sure. Vait till I got him."

She took up the coin now from the case, and some strange sort of thrill came over her as she did so, she could not tell why. What was its message, halting, broken, incomplete? Did it hold a story? What was the story?

"It's odd, isn't it?" said she, and laid it down again carelessly-with a carelessness well feigned, for Kitty Gray had bought antiques before now, and knew well enough when to suppress interest.

"Odt? I should say it vas odt," re joined the old dealer. Kitty had picked up an inlaid mother of pearl fan and was studiously examining that now. "How much?" asked she, holding up the fan.

"For the broken coin?" "No, the fan."

"I vant twelf tollar for him."

"For the coin?" "No, for the fan. For the coin-vat you gif me?"

"Why, what earthly use would I have for a broken piece of metal like ty Gray. "You have not forgotten all that, Mr. Mainz?"

"Gif me for the fan eleven dollar, und I make you a present of the broken coin anyway."

Kitty Gray's heart gave a sudden little jump. She would have given twice time." eleven dollars for the coin itself, but she made a good pretense.

"Eleven dollars is a good deal of money," said she. "I would have to go without lunch for guite a while."

"You are a goot sport, Miss Cray," said the old dealer. "I dank you very mooch. I should wrap them up?"

"The fan-yes. Let me see the coin again." She pushed across the counter almost the last of the tightly folded bills in her purse.

"Read the inscription for me, and I snock off two tollars from the fan!" said Mainz. "Vot is it? It is not Cher- lisher of the Evening Star. He looked man, it is not Franzoesisch, it is not at her thoughtfully as he approached. English. I am all those. But I could not read him."

Kitty held before her the curious Gray's eyes grew larger. object, a slight frown puckering her brows.

"Well, you see," said she, "it is broken right across on the right hand to Gretzhoffen, ambassadress to any across, but it must mean 'thesaurus' modest and safe line of life to ad- seemed neither to hurry nor to linger. king trusted. But this man finally I take you home-to some hospital- is the Count Frederick." venture upon something perhaps fate- She could not make out who it was, gave up some part of what he knew- to the hotel? Come in, you are wel-"Count Frederick-the pretender!" -that means 'a collection'-a 'collecful-perhaps indeed fatal-Kitty Gray, dared not hang upon him her own sus- part of the proof, whatever it was-to come." "Hush, mademoiselle, for God's sake tion of value,' don't you know? "The next line is one word; it's all sober-faced, turned from the door of picion. the new king, when he himself was The man looked at her mutely, heshush! We do not dare-you must not She turned to the captain now and about to die. itating. there-'Regis,'" she went on. "That's the Evening Star and walked slowly dare." plain. 'Rex'-'regis'-it means 'king's' toward the corner where customarily made report of what had happened "Follow!" said Kitty Gray sharply. "Between them, Count Frederick and "Come, I will carry you where you not once but twice; but even as she Michael the Second bankrupted this like." She had him by the arm now, "Now tell me more." or 'of the king.' 'The king's treasures' she took her car for home. She entered her apartment, cast one went she smiled grimly to herself. The kingdom, or at least Michael did. It and unsightly as he seemed, hurried (TO BE CONTINUED.) -what?

"Und vot next?"

know dot. Vot! you are going?" CHAPTER II.

The Big Assignment. Kitty Gray did not go to her usual place for luncheon that day. Instead waking, she hurried into a nearby delicatessen shop and bought a sandwich, which she put in her handbag. After this she hurried on back to the office. Ar rived there, without ceremony she went again to the desk of the city editor, and silently laid down before him her empty purse, her antique fan, her sandwich and her broken coin. Cutler looked up with professional calm. "Yes, Miss Gray? Why all this orderly array of fresh and interesting objects?"

"That is my story," said she. "What makes you think so? Are you seeing things. Miss Gray?"

"Look here." Kitty picked up the coin and showed it to him.

"See, it is broken quite across-more than a third of it gone. The inscription is Latin. It is not so much what is on the coin-it is what is off of it. Perhaps it commemorates something."

"Commemorates what, Miss Grav?" "Precisely-what? That's the story!" "By Jove!" Cutler was studying at the inscription. "'Sub' means 'under' -what does it say?--under the bamboo tree?'' "No, 'under the sidewalk' or the 'flagstone,' or 'floor.' "

"'Underneath the flagstone' or 'pavement' or 'floor'-'in the angle' or 'corner'-whatever that may be-'chamber of torture'-'room of torments'-whatever it is-'there will be found treasures'-'of the king'-'of

"-'Of Gretzhoffen!' " concluded Kityour Latin, have you, Mr. Cutler? There is a story for you-if we can only dig it out. There'd be an assignment, wouldn't there? I'd rather do that than society in the summer-

Billy Cutler, time-tried news man, grown thin and grim and gray in the business, sat for just one moment in thought. "Wait a minute, please," said he at length, and rose to leave the room.

Kitty did wait anxiously enough, for what reason she could not tell. . She sat at her own desk, the mysterious broken coin tight clutched in her hand. It seemed an hour before she saw the slender form of the city edito the office of the manager and pub-He held out a check. "Three thousand dollars!" Kitty

"Expense money. Three months" vacation. Full powers as missionary plenipotentiary of the Evening Star Tugging at her heart the swift feel- off towards the bow a man was pass- was put into the possession of an old "What is wrong?" said she. "You "Of the other I know nothing," re-

She wouldn't sold it back to me, I able-or safe-in her own room. Here she lay down upon the single porthole.

She woke-she knew not when nor why-woke with her eyes staring, passing in her instant from sleep to A face was looking in upon her! A man had been looking at her, or trying to look at her, as she lay asleep. Kitty Gray's instinct spoke to her message-she could not tell some. what. Swiftly she caught the chamois bag from her bosom, and, emptying its main treasures into her hand, placed them in that other treasure house of woman-her stocking. Again feeling the drowsiness invoked by the fresh salt air, at length she lay down once more upon the little couch and resigned herself more comfortably to slumber. But again she woke-this time it was with a scream of terror. She had felt the touch of a hand. Something had tugged at her neck. She raised her hand. The cham-ois bag was gone-it was the jerk of the broken silk cord that had tor returning from the door which led awakened her! And there was the hand that had done it, a strong, dark or wasted. hand, full-veined, hairy. It still clutched the bag-it still was visible bery.

to comes from his own nation sul Jethro Thompson of Ohio, cast elsewhere in the Gretzhoffen capital. away in the melancholy enterprise of In the interior of a white marble berth, which was directly beneath the representing the dignity of this repub- fronted palace, perhaps a mile or so lic in this small and none-too-well- distant from the humble quarters of known principality of Gretzhoffen, was the American consulate, a tall, dark, glad-really glad-to see Miss Kitty imperious man was pacing up and Gray. And he knew-really knewdown restlessly, his eyes now and her father, or had done so at the time again turned upon the door of the when he was still living. great apartment, as though he expect-"It's a grand little place, 1sn't ited someone to enter. At length the Gretzhoffen?" said Kitty smiling. "I've door did open. A soft-footed servant read about it-and written about it-appeared. before now. But this isn't a vacation. "Monsieur Roleau, excellency," he really. I am on a big assignment, Mr. announced.

Consul. I may want your help-the "What, Roleau!" exclaimed the tall only trouble is, I don't know what I do man impetuously, as the visitor enwant to do-I am after a story, and I tered. "What has kept you? The ship docked hours ago. And have you got don't know where it is or what it is!" The gaunt, kindly old man smiled it? Come, come, man!"

at her. "Well, my dear, rest assured The individual addressed as Roleau that I will do all I can for you. And, bowed deeply. "Excellency." he said, "I came as soon as I could be sure I between us, we ought to start something, maybe; if it's stories you're would not be watched."

He was a man of dark complexion, after, you've come to the place where of strong and sturdy build, of broad they grow, that's sure enough. Why, Miss Kitty, the story of the king of shoulders and deep chest-a man half a giant, one would have said-but his Gretzhoffen alone would fill a book." "What do you know of Gretzhoffen, eyes dropped as they met the stern gaze of him he addressed, as though anyhow?" he asked suddenly. "You he might have been his master. said you had written about it. I sup-"You found it-you succeeded, then

-tell me!" "Well, you see," replied Kitty, "Excellency-sire-yes." when the big news story about the The newcomer extended a hand proposed Gretzhoffen loan-its hawkwhich trembled slightly. "I swear it ing about the street and its rejectionwas in this bag"-he was offering a when that came out I was put on the little chamois bag tied with a ribbon assignment of looking into Gretzhoffen at the top-a bag which apparently in general. I remember that the old had been once suspended by the king's name was Michael, wasn't it?" broken silk cord attached to it. "The one that died? Yes, Michael "You say it was in this bag-then the First. He was a good sort. His why not now?"

death was the unluckiest thing that The tall man caught the little reever happened for this poor little peoceptacle from the other's handsple. He was a good man. King Michael, ripped it wide-shook out the conand a strong one and a just. So much tents. There fell into his hand upon cannot be said, I am thinking, of the the table near which he stood, only a new incumbent of the throne, Michael few trinkets of a woman's toilet-a the Second. little dainty handkerchief-a coin, yes,

"You see, this Michael the Second is a coin. only a king in name, when it comes to facts. He is only a little lieutenant. hand, his face distorted with rage. He has been put on the job by a bigger and stronger man-Count Frederick is money! Curse you!" He half shrieked, the real power behind the throne in and as he did so flung the piece full Gretzhoffen-a strong and handsome in the other's face, with such violence man-be sure you don't fall in love that the skin broke under its imwith him. What, Count Frederick pact. plans no one knows. Perhaps he

"The coin!" went on the enraged has his own eye on the throne-we speaker-"what do you mean? Do you can't tell what may happen. I say it mock me, Frederick, your real monis a tense sort of place, Gretzhoffen. arch? You shall die for this. You But Gretzhoffen is broke. Michael, the have failed-you have not found itking, is broke. Count Frederick, the Warwick of Gretzhoffen, also is broke. you have lost it!"

His own eyes half starting from his That is why they tried to make a loan head in his anger, he strode forward in our own country. and caught the throat of Roleau in "But they didn't seem to have the his two mighty hands, shaking him collateral-no unused revenues-nothas he would have shaken a child. ing which had not been used or spent "Go!" he said, and flung him toward

"When Michael the First died, his the door. treasury disappeared. He was rich, It was as Kitty Gray, after leaving the at the porthole. A ribbon end had en- the old king was-rich in the name of American consulate, was speeding totangled itself for just an instant in the Gretzhoffen. But the crown jewels, ward her hotel in her hired vehicle northole fastening-an instant long the imperial securities, the crown that she caught sight of a man staggering from the side entrance of a enough for Kitty to see what had been treasures of all sorts, the imperial the hand that had committed this rob- mintage of every description-they great mansion house of white marble front. He seemed to have escaped disappeared. There was rumor that But who was the robber himself? the old king hid his treasures somefrom some calamity-from an attempt-Quick as thought Kitty sprang to the where, but that he left some sort of a ed out some of the other large hotels- Huerta, whom he helped establish in mansion houses of this or that court power, sent him abroad on a diploofficial, the hall of justice, the city matic mission. Most of this time he hall, the great cathedrals, the royal has spent in the United States. imperious man was pacing up and palace, the palace of the Count Frederick.

"Yes," exclaimed Kitty Gray, "It The hotel of the Count Frederick I know, yes, but why-how did you-". hand, touched her arm gently, requesting silence.

A great car, splendidly equipped and driven at rushing speed, came out of the very side street on, which Kitty Gray had found her companion on the previous day. In the car, his gloved hand resting on his stick, sat a tall man, erect, strikingly handsome, in his own way, imperious of air and bold of gaze.

Kitty Gray did not notice that her companion had shrunk back low into the seat. Her own eyes met those of the occupant of the advancing car. Kitty Gray was young and more than a little handsome. She had taken pains to turn herself out well' as she might in view of the possible the extent of these facilities and to surroundings she might meet on her strange quest. To the bold eyes of the tall stranger she must have seemed fair enough to look upon, for suddenly, as he passed, he stared at her directly, bowed, raised his hat-yes, even smiled

"You Shall Die for This."

"Who was that man?" demanded Kitty Gray fiercely of her companion. "He doesn't know me. And yet how like he looked to pictures I have seen. There was a man-an international spy, they said in our countrysome strange foreigner-at the time of the Gretzhoffen loan fiasco. Yes, the two faces are strangely alike. Who

SHOULD BUILD SHIPS FAST.

New Construction Should Be Limited Only in Facilities to Build.

Washington .- New construction for the navy should be limited this year only by the country's facilities to build, Rear Admiral Austin M. Knight, president of the Navy War College. told the House Naval Committee. If an adequate fleet is to be made ready by 1925, he declared, an immediate inquiry should be made to determine plan for even greater building programs each year until the United States Navy is the strongest force afloat.

"It is a big program, of course," said Admiral Knight, "but we have a big country to defend."

Only the limits of construction facilities, the admiral explained, had caused the general board to fix 1925 as the date the American fleet should equal any afloat.

"If we could get it," he added, "I would say we need it now, today, tomorrow."

In reaching its decision, the witness said, the board had before it the spectre of a double assault against the United States, with enemies in the Atlantic and Pacific to meet at the same time. He said the fleet proposed would meet any such combination that did not include England, and he thought it unlikely that a combination against the United States including that country ever would be formed. Asked if he had any reason to believe that there was danger of another combination, the admiral said "yes," but he was not pressed to amplify his statement.

Pass Postoffice Bill.

Washington .- Over bitter and persistent opposition, the house passed the annual postoffice appropriation bill with its provisions for substituting a space basis for the present weight system of paying railroads for carrying mails and prohibiting any increase in the existing limit of 50 peunds on parcel posts packages. The measure carries appropriations aggregating $321,000,000 to operate the posta! system during the coming year. The fight against the space payment plan was hard fought.

Haiti Treaty Ratified.

ed robbery or murder. Without pausside-almost a third of the writing is old place you happen to think of, Washington. - The senate unanigone. It says something about look- Miss Gray. I never knew the old man door, ran down the deck, out the next mysterious record by which they might ing to ponder upon propriety, she haltmously ratified the treaty with Haiti deck door. The band was giving its be traced. No one knowe just what ed her vehicle and sprang out, hastening for something under the floor, un- to go off his head before, but he has under which the United States assumfirst saloon concert, and the decks was left for that record. It is known. ing over to the sufferer, who stood der the pavement of some place of this time." es a protectorate over the turbulent were sparsely tenanted, it seemed. Far however, or supposed, at least, that it at the edge of the curb. torture or torment." is he?" island Republic, taking over control of "Thesaur'-that word's broken ing that she was leaving her usual ing-what man she could not say. He servant-one of the few men the old are in trouble-you are hurt! Shall joined her companion; "but this-he its finances and police guaranteeing ing what man she could not say. He its finances and police guaranteeing its finances and police guarant ing to develop its resources. The treaty already has been approved by the Haitien Congress, and its terms virtually are in operation under the eye of a strong American marine expedition. This treaty was negotiated last year with D'Artiguenave.

pose-"

"I Choost Sold It to Dot Young Lady Who Went Out."