PURIOUSED STATE SECRETS .- The London correspondent of the New Orleans Delta avers that the secrets of the conference of kings at Warsaw Newspaper, bdls ... were obtained for the French Emperor by a trick | Wool, bales ... played upon the Emperor of Austria, which is Rice, cl'n, casks,

"It is related that the Emperor and suite, in three carriages, and an escort, arrived, after three meister, and all the little fry of bureaucracy on of 1859, ending 31st of December of each year ; next thing to bended knees. The Emperor told them he was glad to see them, but they need not trouble themselves to read the address of congratulation to him, for he was confoundedly hungry and wanted breakfast. The best rooms of the attle inn had been taken by an Englishman, and it was afterward found that he had done the same thing through fifty miles of country, so that he was prepared at all the inns for at ravelling hungry Emperor on his way back. The courteons stranger, of course, complied with the request of mine host, and was too glad to accommodate the Emperor. During the repast, however, he was admitted to the bedroom by mine host on some pretence for something he had left there. He did not remain more than ten minutes, if so much, but was afterward seen no more by the Inn-keeper; nav. nor by the police. clever as they are, of the whole kingdom, who were on the alert; for this modern Claude Duval had managed to abstract the small red and gold covered writing desk of his Majesty, the Emperor of Austria wherein were contained all the documents which related to the Warsaw meeting; and though doubtless not one contained a treaty, there must have been fifty which let out the whole of the secret of the undertaking which had been mutually come to by the three powers. This reads like a romance, but it is a fact well vouched for

A CHILD IN HEAVEN -A clergyman lost a child. A brother minister attended the funeral and at the close of his remarks the father of the deceased child arose and spoke as follows to his people who were present?

"When I have sought to minister to you consolation in the time of your afflictions, weeping with you over your dying children, you have often said to me that I knew nothing of the anguish, and could not sympathize with you in cour loss. I feel it now; I never did before.' Then he directed them to the source of his comfort and support, and invited all to the fountain of living waters. His house stood on a hill side overlooking a beautiful river, on the other side people of the place in full view before me. The and my affections were here. But a few months ago, one of my children moved across to the other ide, and took up his residence there. Since then 21 bags. my heart has been there also. In the morning, when I rise and look out towards the east, I think of my child who is ever there; and again and again through the day I think of him, and the other side of the river is always in my thoughts, with the child who has gone there. And now, since another of my children has crossed the Crockery, China and Glass Ware ever yet offered river of death, and has gone to dwell on the other to the citizens of Wilmington. ide, my heart is drawn out towards Heaven, as shall think of Heaven, but with the memory of thing used in the House Furnishing line. that dear child who is to be among its inhabitants forever.

A FABLE FOR THE YOUNG .- Ernest had accomanied his father into the vineyard, which were ich with promise for the coming autumn. There he found a honey bee struggling in the web of a large garden spider, which had already opened its fangs to seize upon its prey; but Ernest set etc. the bee at liberty, and destroyed the glistening

The father, observing what had passed, inquired of his son how he could so lightly esteem the skill and ingenuity of the little artist, as to annibilate its work in a moment. 'Did'st thou not | ___ commended by the first physicians of the see with what beauty and order those slender country, on account of their Purity and Medicinal threads were interwoven? How could'st thou then be at the same moment so pitiful and yet so hard-bearted? But the boy excused himself, saying:

'Is there not evil in the spider's art? for it only thoney and wax within its cell; so I gave freedom ranted in claiming what we do, we beg leave to to the bee, and destroyed the spider's web."

The father was pleased at this decision of a simple child, who saw no beauty in ingenuity, when its aim was destruction. "But," continued the father, "perhaps you have been unjust towards the spider. See how it protects our ripening grapes from the flies and wasps, by means of the net which it weaves around the branches!'! 'Does it do so," asked the boy, "with the intention of protecting our grapes, or merely that it may satisfy its own thirst for blood?"

"Truly," replied his father, "it troubles itself very little about our grapes." "Oh!" said Ernest, "then the good it does cannot be worth much; for I have heard you say that it is a good will alone which can impart beauty or goodness even to the most useful

"Very true, my boy; we may be thankful, however, that in the course of nature, that which is evil often fosters what is good and useful without intending to do so."

. Wherefore," inquired Ernest, "does the spider sit so solitary in its web, whilst the bees live sociably together, and work in union? Why might not the spiders also make one huge web, and use it in common?"

"Dear child," answered his father, "a good bject alone can ensure friendly co-operation. The bond of wickedness or selfishness contains within itself the seeds of dissolution. Therefore wise nature never attempts that which men too often learn by their own experience to be vain and impracticable."

On their way homewards the father observed : Hast thou not learnt somewhat from the spider to-day, my boy? Remember that in this world we shall often find good and evil mixed together our friends and foes side by side, so that what is good may, from the contrast, appear all the more beautiful. Thus may we learn a lesson even from what is evil in itself."

The man who took a glance at the past has been looking into futerity.
