The New Orleans Delta says: "We learn that J. T. Wheat, Secretary of the Convention, has been appointed by the Governor a Captain in the Infantry of Louisiana." We are glad to see this promotion of a very clever gentleman, as we were glad to see him announced as Secretary of the Convention which passed the ordinance of secession. Capt. Wheat has a very large number of friends and acquaintancertin North Carolina, who will be pleased to hear of his success.

Serious Shooting Affray.

Welearn that on Saturday night last, about 10 o'clock, a very unfortunate difficulty occurred in front of the Drug Store of Mr. L. B. Erambert, under the City Hotel, in this place, which resulted very seriously to Mr. A. J. Costing and Mr. Erambert, but to the latter particmlarly. They were both shot by a man named - Palk Shelley, with a Colt's pistol .. As the matten will undergo judicial investigation, we forhear any statement of the facts as we heard them Mr. Costin was shot in the side or hip, the ball ranging around the back, and making a severe, but not dangerous wound. It was extracted vesterday. Mr. Erambert was shot in the thigh, the ball shattering the bone and makne &very painful and serious wound. We learn that the ball has not been found. The wound will, under the most favorable circumtraces confine Mr. Erambert to his bed for months, we are informed. The whole matter is matik to be deplored.

THE CAREER OF A RICH MAN .- We have seen it stated lately, upon what appeared to be reliable authority, that the wealth of William B. Astor of New York, amounts to at least forty millions of dollars. It is curious to trace this broad yellow stream to its first little beginnings in the early career of John Jacob Astor, father of the present millionaire.

From a sketch of this remarkable man, which appears in a work entitled "Fifty Years in Both Hemispheres," by Vincent Nolte, we learn that John Jacob Astor was born at Heidelberg, where the original name of his family is said to have been Aschter, and that he came to New York as a furrier's apprentice. He was at that time as poor as any other apprentice boy, then or now in New York. The wages he got in the peltry warehouse for beating out and preparing various same places every Wednesday afternoon, at 4 skins, he invested in the purchase of all kinds of peltry—bear, mink, and rabbit skins—which he got from the Indians; who at that time wander-ed about the streets of New York, and as soon as he had collected a certain quantity he sent them to Europe, particularly to the Leipsic fair. There, it is stated, he traded them off for Nuremberg wares, cheap knives, glass beads, and other articles adapted to trade with the Indians on the Canadian frontiers, and took them himself to the latter points, where he again exchanged them for furs of various kinds. He had often told Mr. Nolte that he carried on this work untiringly for twelve long years, going in person, alternately, to the Canadian frontiers and then to Leipsic fair, and lived all the while as he had been accustomed to do, humbly and sparingly. After he had thus managed to bring together a considerable capital, he gradually became a freighter of ships, and fitted out expeditions to the Northwest coast to trade with the Indians of Nootka Sound for furs. Another and very considerable round up to the ladder of fortune was taken by Astor in land speculation. Some of his countrymen owned land in New York by virtue of being relations and heirs of German soldiers who had fought in the American Army in the Revolution, and to whom Congress had voted land in consequence. Many of the soldiers died without converting their property into money, and Astor, after a visit to Heidelberg, made arrangements with the heirs which was mutually agreeable; they thinking it better to have a little ready cash than to own a great deal of land, the value of which was very slow in increasing, and he having foresight to anticipate, and patience to await the result.

So the heirs get their money, and Astor obained their land, some of which is now among the most important in the city of New York .-In this way a fortune of twelve millions of dollars was accumulated. This vast increase under the management of his son Wm. B. Astor, Esq., shows that he inherits the energy and business habits of his father, but affords no such demonstration of money making genius as the career of John Jacob. Indeed, the latter is reported to have said that it cost him more trouble to make the first thousand dollars than all the remainder of his fortune .- Balt. American.
