THE GLORIOUS ISSUE of the bombardment Fort Sumter says the Charleston Mercury wa alluded to in the discourses at several of our Churches yesterday. At the Cathedral a Te Deum was chaunted in thanksgiving for the bloodless victory.

What we Saw in Charleston. We left Wilmington on Thursday night las to witness, and, if allowed, to participate in the bombardment of Fort Sumter. Our journey was full of the excitement which one might expect to realize when on his way to the field of battle for the first time. On Friday morning, when about twenty-five miles from Charleston, we heard the heavy ordnance of Sumter and the different bat teries on the islands, and as the jarring thunder steadily and at regular intervals broke upon the early morning air, the excitement on the cars in creased to ferer heat and the passengers could scartely restrain their impatience at one or two very brief stoppages of the train to take up several South Carolinians who were hurrying to the scene of action. As the train approached the city, the dull, heavy explosions shook the air in rapid succession like thunder-claps and at a last the clouds of smoke from the different batteries became visible, and the smell of burnt powfound the streets comparatively quiet-the citi zens and strangers of both sexes having crowded down to the Pattery and, eating a hurried break fast, we ascended to the roof of the Mills House with a friend, to take a view. And such a view There lay be waters of the beautiful harbor, sparkling at heaving gently to the kiss of the morning breeze. Directly before us rose out of the deep the beleaguered fortress, all its angles softened by the distance-the once glorious ensign of a once glorious republic floating proudly over its walls, and the whole scene looking as peaceful and beautiful as God intended it should be. But see I from a point on the right a white puff of smoke is sent, and, ere the report reaches us, a red flame bursts over the flag-staff of Fort Sumter and the dreadful bomb scatters its fragments over the doomed fort and comes to the car with a report almost equal to that of the mortar from which it proceeded. Another puff from the opposite side where the floating battery and Fort Moultrie are located an answer from Maj. Anderson, a round shot hurtles through the hir from Comings Point; and so it goes. We hurry down, passing the bulletin boards of the Mer cury and Courier offices, and learning there that as yet, "pobody is hurt." Arrived at the Battery, (we state here, for the benefit of the uninformed, that the "Battery" here alluded to is the celebrated promenade along the edge of the Bay of Charleston) we find several thousand ladies and gentlemen, citizens and strangers gazing at the conflict and all impressed with the character of the drama which was being enacted Soldiers on horseback and on foot, messengers and aids harry to and fro. There was no weeping-no apparent distress-but upon the faces of all,-men, women and children, Determination was stamped in unmistakeable characters. We took our stand and watched every shot from every battery on each of the islands and from Fort Sumter. "There goes Stevens' Battery," goes Anderson," "look at that shell." "how for the Floating Battery," "Ripley keeps up the fire from Fort Moultrie gloriously." 'I'd give $100 to be there," and a thousand other similar expressions constantly greeted the ear, while every time a shell would explode over Sumter, leaving its little cloud of white smoke, a cheer would good from the large concourse of spec-tators. Major Anderson generally alternated his shots with the different batteries (five or six in number, that were playing on him; but these and various other rumors to be false .-

The conduct of this fleet is enough to bary the witnessed the fight all day, riding quietly at anchor in sight of the wharves and not more than three miles from Fort Sumter. When night came every one confidently expected the attempt would be finde to come in, or land troops, and if they had had their own time to choose out of five years, they could not have been favored with so menty advantages. There was a splen-did tide, the wind was in their favor, it was as dark as pich, rainy and misty, and there were no lights turning on the old hulks in the harbor as there had been the night before. Their attempt was regarded as so certain that preparations were redoubled at every point. Every one looked to see a general engagement. Thus the night wore away.

Early Saturday morning the fire was resumed, and in a very short while the cry went through the city, "Fort Sumter is on fire," and so it was. A dense volume of smoke rose from the fort, and durid flames leaped up visible to the the Floating Battery and Fort Moultrie, but it diping in it.

evidently became slower and weaker. The boy's on Morris Island gave him three cheers for every gun he fired. And now there comes a tremendous explosion in the fort, resembling the blowing up of a house, and throwing smoke and flame high in the air. Some said the magazine had exploded; others that he was blowing up the barracks to stop the flames; but the truth was that a shell or hot shot had struck some hand-grenades and loose ammunition, causing the explosion. Anderson's fire ceased altogether, as the devouring element enveloped the fort ; but the shell from his enemies burst around him with increased rapidity and fury as he endeavored to extinguish the flames. At last, a yell from the whole line of spectators along the wharves and battery, announced the fall of the flag which had been defiantly floating throughout the engagement, but which had been shot way. It was so long before the flag was raised again that the opinion became general that his men were exhausted or smothered with smoke, or killed, and that he could not raise the flag again, and accordingly, Col. Wigfall started in a small boat from Morris Island, bearing the white flag for Fort Sumter. Before he reached the fort, however, Maj. Anderson had showed the stars and stripes again, ogether with a white flag; but the firing coninued at sight of the former, and Col. Wigfall entered the fort through a storm of shell and shot, and asked for Major Anderson. When he made his appearance, Col. Wigfall said that secing his distress, his utter inability to hold out, and that his flag was not raised, he, as aid to Gen. Beauregard, claimed a surrender. Major Anderson wished to know upon what terms he was expected to surrender, to which Col. Wigfall-gracefully replied, that Gen. Beauregard was | ply gentleman and a soldier, and knew how to hauled down and the batteries on Sullivan's Isand ceased their fire. At the first appearance of the white flag, the enthusiasm and excitement became very great all over the city and among the troops, and when the Palmetto and Confederate flags were raised on the parapets, the ordinance from all points of the harbor, pealed forth their joyful thunder. The water was alive with craft of all sorts. The details of the surrender were then made. Major Anderson was allowed to carry serve the Union, and maintain the government der was walted pleasantly on the breeze. We out his property and side arms and to salute his flag. And we would be glad to close this brief narrative here-but the worst and the best thing connected with the battle of Fort Sumter, hapbened subsequently. The hand of Providence seemed to be in this fight. History records nowhere the fact that skillful artillerists on both sides have fired for 33 hours without killing, or seriously wounding a man. Major Anderson's men were so small in number that, notwithstanding the fort is a scene of desolation inside, they could all be safely stowed away in the easemates and thus escape the iron hail .-The sand batteries and iron batteries protected the South Carolinians wonderfully. The only oss of life that was experienced occurred when Mai: Anderson's men were saluting his flag immediately previous to leaving the fort. In firing one of the guns, some shells or loose ammunition lying on the parapels caught and exploded, siling one man instantly, and mortally wounding three or four others, two of whom have since died. Gen: Beauregard ordered that the one that was killed should be buried with military honors, which was done.

The incident that we have characterized above as the best thing, happened when Capt. Gillis, Commander of the fleet, met Major Anderson on board the Isabel-to which vessel he (Gillis) had been rowed up from his fleet. A friend of ours was the only civilian, except a son of the owner of the Isabel, on board when Major Anderson came aboard. He says that Gillis stood Curtin at the gangway offered his hand to Major Anderson, which the latter barely took, and turned his back on him immediately. Gillis approached him again, when Anderson turned and walked away again, and this he repeated until Gillis took the hint and kept away from him .-Our friend says that it was a stinging exhibition of lofty contempt. This incident we have taken the trouble to circulate as much as possible, because it is strictly true, and is very significant.

Major Anderson would not, or at least he did not go or propose to go in the fleet, but asked for a private steamer. He was, there can be no doubt, 'utterly disgusted and indiguant at the infamous imbecility and cowardice of those in command of the fleet, who could have got to him easily, as was generally admitted. It was a degrading sight to see an armed fleet riding quietly at anchor, and watching the man to whose assistance they had come, driven by shot and shell, and smoke, to the last extremity-showing signals of distress, though fighting like a game chicken-we say it was degrading to see that fleet, with the flag that has been glori- and South Carolina are on many lips. ous, floating above them, riding at anchor, and making no motion towards going to the brave man's assistance. We heard gentlemen whose sons and brothers were in the fight, cursing and denouncing with bitter scorn the white livered scoundrels who would incur no danger in trying to rescre such a man. No wonder the British Vice-Constil at Charleston says he is afraid to write the truth home, for fear his story would not be believed. The stars and stripes are no at Cummings' Point after 2 o'clock on Friday. longer to be respected, or loved, or feared. Gen. Beauregard is prepared for any treach-Cheering news arrived from all quarters, of the ry or rastality from the fleet or the administra tion which it so well represents. We made some very pleasant acquaintances at Charleston heard Gov: Pickens speak-saw and talked with Gen. Beauregard, who is a very quiet gentlemen, and with other officers-among whom were our freinds Major Whiting and Capt. J. P. Jones, a nephew of Hon, Thomas Ashe, of Anson County in this State. Our venerable friend Edmund Ruffin Esq., was in the whole fight and fired the first gun. Dr. Ja nes A. Miler of this place and Dr. Ramsay of Northampon were in Stevens iron battery during the SECASSION PLOTTING IN DELAWARE. Information, from what is deemed reliable sources, was received last night to the effect that the secessionists of Delaware, whose headquarters are reported to be in Virginia, were about to make a sudden attack upon Fort Delaware, opposite Delaware City, on the Delaware river, for which they were preparing last month. Immediate steps have been taken by the Secretary of War to prevent the consummation of the plot.
