the election of a certain man to office? (f)SINEX.

We will endeavor to answer the questions here put us with perfect candor, merely premising that the answers, though given by us, are not ours. The general government, congress and northern sentiment make the answers ; we merely spread them before the people, in no manner endorsing or approving or disapproving them.

(a.) "What more does the president require of North Carolina to enable her to resume her place in the union than she has already done ?"

Answer-The manifestation of a spirit in accord with the spirit of those people who have never resisted the power of the United States government. It is required that this spirit shall be so clearly expressed that those who have sustained the government through its four years struggle shall be satisfied that the south has changed its political sentiment, and henceforth will, not only not again attempt revolution, but not desire to attempt it.

(b) "Has not the state met every requisition he has made most fully in every respect?"

Answer-Manifestly, no. True she has, as our correspondent states, " repealed the ordinance of secession, repudiated the war debt, and adopted the amendment to the constitution abolishing slavery." But "everything that he required has not " been done and done willingly." Reflect for one moment. What has been done was not so done of the free will of the people, but simply under the dictation of the president Nothing further than what was so dictated in the direction of an adjustment of affairs between the south and the north has been done. Nothing has been done voluntarily, gratuitously. In each case it has required the special interference of executive influence to procure the action. More: The president directed the loyal people of the state to organize a state government. Under his auspices William W. Holden was put forward as the loyal candidate for governor, and was supported by those men who were most loyal. Jonathan Worth was brought forward by a class of men who were not considered, either here or in Wash ington, as conspicuous for their loyalty. In fact, he was run in opposition to the personation of the presdent's scheme of reconstruction. The persona_ tion of the president's scheme of reconstruction was defeated and the opposition to it was elected. Take this in connection with the preceding query. Here was a matter in regard to which the president manifested the utmost solicitude. But he wanted the people to make their own choice, in order that he might have a fair expression of their sentiments; therefore he refrained from openly instructing them. Therefore on that very point they took the, to him, disloyal course; that is, they endorsed and elected the disloyal candidate. Moreover, in the choice of members of congress, on which there was no necessity for Baker N instruction, because of the written law staring Bailey J B northern sentiment. That is a plain truth. And we shall never resume our position in the union AL until we carry out those principles. To illustrate, while writing this article intell.gence is received that the state legislature has elected William A. Graham one of the senators from this state. This election was made in plain view of the fact that Mr. Graham had but recently reing at turned from Washington, where he had been 33 & 34 unsuccessfully pleading with the president for a par lon. The president declined to pardon him. He is an alien to the United States government, and incapacitated from holding any office. And yet the legislature deliberately elects him to the highest office within its gift. Is not that plainly $\mathbf{S}_{ing}^{\mathrm{EL}}$ an insult to the president and the general govceived ernment? And will the manifestation of such a spirit hasten the restoration of the state to its governmental relations? We may think Mr. Graham one of our best citizens; the government thinks otherwise. Is it wise, expedient, courteous, politic in us to insist upon our view of the case in opposition to the view the government has deliberately taken? The people of North Carolina are men of sense. Their politicians and political leaders betray but little sense. The O^N quicker the people cut loose from these leaders floor) ture, the better it will be for them. Until they do cut board loose, their governmental relations will remain in cial Ba the condition in which they now are. - his late dispatch to the provisional governor, characterizes as "greatly damaging the prospects of the state in the restoration of its governmental relations." (c) "Why, then, are we told, in a recent dispatch from the president to Governor Holden, that the late election has materially interfered with our speedy return to the union ?" Answer—In reply to the previous question we have substantially answered this query. (d) "What had that election to do with it ?" Answer—It had everything to do with it. Up to that election the people of the state had made no authentic expression of their sentiments. That election was the test of their organized approval or disapproval of the individual expressions of loyalty previously made by the people.
