Wilmington in Health and Disease.

BY J. B. PURCELL, M. D.

It was last May, and the elacrity with which its first day was greeted by May Queens, and joyous youths had not yet died | hand of your generous protection to the misaway. The vernal hue of Spring was in its fullest tint. The showers of April had started from the sod the modest daisy the The beautiful magnolia with its leaves of deepest green, and its pure white blossoms, emitted a delicious fragrance, most grateful to the sight, and to the sense of smell. The earth was revolving a bright sun in a bright sky to its meridian height and splendor. No dark speck was visible on the horizon. Nothing presaged an interruption to the outburst of genial good humor and fellow feeling. Jocularity was freely elicited, and in its hilarious indulgence the jolt and the WIMINGTON WELLY POST, in its hilarious indulgence the jolt and the jump along the plank-road were forgotten. land. A rarer collection of high toned gentlemen could not be found in this section of the State. Every one of them were thorough bred representatives of the Old North State save one. The latter represented the United States, and its army. More honorably could this be done by no man. His Country first and himself afterwards. A reference to this will sound strangely in distant ears, as it has been so widely circulated that no body lives here now-but rebels, and secessionists, copperheads, and traitors, and that every body wearing the uniform of the Government is shunned as if a leper. Let the flaunting lie be flung out on the breeze, and let it be wafted throughout the land. Strife, contention is past; harmony, unity is living, and it will ere long cast every blemish behind, and put on the symetry of another life. Leaving this matter to the, inevitable result of time, we return to our seat in the rockaway. Onward we speed over a bottom land, and through some thickly arborets, and arboreous ravines. At last we think we hear lowed with a vision of the tempest tossed spray, majestic looking oaks now gradually appear, and very soon a broad expansive lawn, and a manor adorn the picture. Its spacious piazza soon resounded to the tread and fro with occupants. Cigars, and good old rye, Cognac, and the best Sauterne and scuppernong elevated the temperature of our bonhommie. As far as the eye could scan billow-rocked vessels rode wavingly along the deep. The sky was beginning to change. The wind had run to the East. In the creek below that rounded the foot of the domain, wooly headed urchins were engaged in catch ing pigfish. Our very worthy host had us all shortly summoned to an oyster lunch. shall never forget the widespreading live oak beneath whose protecting shade a sumptuous feast was spread. It stretched forth enormous limbs in every direction larger than ordinary trees. Its head towered on high. In its branches crows for ages might have built their nest and fledged their callow young. Generations must have in their turn sat around its base, and listened to the summer have they perhaps danced innocent hours away; and, roasted the fresh oyster, and eaten the pickle, and the buttered cake. The latter did we with much gulosity. We thought of the patriarchal days gone by, of the many endearments which make Southerners cling to their Southern homes, and to their penates; of the bloody strife that had but as yesterday swept like a simcom of destruction over their fair sunny land. Not > Satisfied at length of this festive scene we roamed about, viewing this thing and that until we reached the residence of a gentleman related to our generous entertainer. Here we were shown many things of interest, and a field laid out in nicely measured ridges of peanuts. Several monarchs of the forest were also pointed out, and their history given. They sheltered many a Whig of her presence to bull-fights. from tory vengeance during the dark days of Tryon's tyranny, and Martin's despotism. Late in the evening we all sat down to dinner. The young suckling lay stretched upon an immense platter of silver. To deseribe the whole would require more language than at our present command. Thunder was muttering far off in the distance. It came rumbling along the skies. We started for Wilmington sooner than we would by indebted to their mothers for counsel and have, did the sun not hide reelf behind in guidance. Oh, the poor, the afflicted, the outcast, the homeless, the friendless that can be saved under such a benign refuge! Every city in the land, second to a church erects an asylum for the sick. The Knights of Malta and the Knights Templar worked for the poor. The daughters of Vincent de Paul worked, and work for the poor. They are ever around the sick man's couch, and at his dying bedside. The Redeemer went about doing good, He healed the sick, the halt and the blind. He counseled us to visit them, to tend them, to harbor them. Surely a work which he has done, a command which he has given, ought to receive our every attention. He came to free to deliver the needy when he crieth, the poor also, and him that hath no helper. Woman, need we speak to you? You on whom society hangs; you whose power among men is omnipotent; in the twinkle of whose eve is all that is noble and delicate; in whose smiles beneficently beams charity; whose tongue can command the magic words of the Man-God : Deal thy bread to the hungry; when thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. We know that no appeal is ever made to woman in vain. Our noble women, and our many institutions of charity, in pushing forward the work of Christ, do more for the protection of our people, rich and poor, from the possibility of infectious diseases, than our best system of municipal regulations. Extend the erable victims of poverty, to the impure dens and haunts of disease. Let opulence dispense liberally from his coffers, and the infirm poor will bless him, and treasure eternal will be garnered for him in Heaven.

In conclusion we would say, in the words of the dying Laplace-words fraught with wisdom that none can controvert:-" The known is little, but the unknown is im-
