Woodcock vs. Hamlin.

For the Post.

N. C., there lived from a "time whereof the memory of (this) man runneth not to the contrary" a family whom we shall call Hamlin. It consisted of Jack Hamlin and several maiden sisters, all of whom were distinguished by the angularity of their figures and their insensibility to, or utter disregard of the changes and frivolities of fashion. Though living in the immediate vicinity of this very fashionable place, where the new est modes always obtain, they preserved in tact the primitive simplicity of dress and manners that is now rarely met with even in the "back-woods" of the State. They were a quiet unpretending family and tolerably well-to-do. They spun and wove, and cut and made their own garments. No "high-falutin" miliner or mantua maker was resorted to, or needed by the girls, and no tailor ever made his solt out of Jack. There they lived, or rather vegetated, in quiet obscurity, as their ancestors had done before not apparent in the present condition of them.

Well, in course of time, a suitor came a wooing-we shall call him Woodcock. He was from one of the upper Counties of the State, and had lately settled in the neighborhood. His suit was successful and in due course a lengthy Miss Hamlin became Mistress Woodcock.

Their affairs prospered -- the new member of the family adopted their habits and all went on harmoniously until within a few years back when, sad to relate, an incident occurred that brought the quiet brothers-inlaw before the bar of the County Court in the antagonistic characters of Plaintiff and Defendant.

This celebrated case, never before report- Fillmore. ed, was brought about in this wise : Woodcock having a horse for which he had no immediate use loaned the same to his brother in law, Jack, and the latter, after using him for a time sold him and forgot to account to Woodcock for the proceeds of sale-hence the suit. The lawyer charged with the prosecution instituted his action for trover and conversion and, after the usual "laws delay" the oceries. Provisions. Wines, trial came on. The testimony adduced es tablished Woodcock's ownership of the horse, traced it to Hamlin's possession, showed the sale of it by him, &c., &c., in Juarez last August have sufficed to supply Mexico with a most efficient corps of bandits. They range the country in bands of from five to five hundred, sack towns and plunder travelers with equal impunity. They are capitally well organized, with em issaries in the different cities and stations, and have time and again defeated the regular troops sent out after them. Juarez may proclaim the most severe punishment, and execute it when he gets a chance, but of course it can have little effect upon such a wide spread organization. It is, in fact, a business, and so considered by the bandits. When Secretary Plumb was robbed on the Chiquite mountains, a young bandit, of six-teen years, was caught and executied as an example. He went to his death smoking a a cigar, and was hung to the limb of a tree by the roadside with the weed between his lips. They regard these execution as mere business transaction, just as they do their robceries. Instant death is the penalty of the captured bandit. But they preserve the utmost good humor, smoking drinking and chatting merrily until the rope or the bullet does it work. There is no supplication, for mercy, no trembling, or nervousness. They die as they kill a man, without remorse or fear. This evil has probably grown as great as it can, but how it is to be diminished is Mexican society.

AALCEDARIAN OMENS.-One of those people who are always finding occult rules in generalzing upon well known facts writes to a Western paper that General Gant's name does not codtain the syllable "on," and therefore he cannot be clected President. He monfions the name of nine Presidents whose names contain this syllable or a modification of it, and that without mentioning J ohn Adams, J-ohn Quincy Adams, or J ohn Tyler. Unfortunately for the theory it is not a universal rule, inasmuch as we have had a James K. Polk, a Zachnary Taylor, and a Franklin Pierce. The witter tive. evidently forgot Mr. Buchanan. The other Pressidont is included by making the rule the presence of the syllable "on" or some other signifying progress - which brings in It is easy to make rules of this kind. For instance : have any of our readers noticed the obstinacy with which the people of Massachusetts have clung to the first letters of the alphabet in choosing their Governors, so that after Banksthey took Andrew and then Bullocck ? The former Speaker of the House can. was Mr. Stone. We have now become more explicit, and have chosed a preciousa Jewell. Apriori the next Speaker will be a Diamond or some other variety of precious stones, while it is inevitable that for a new governor we must go back to the letter  $\Lambda$ . It is all up with poor Vallandingham.-His reputation as a martyr is assured. Dayton might be induced to make him mayor, or the county to elect him sheriff or probate judge, but his high spirit would disdain such positions, and he can attain nothing higher. There is no chance for a senatorship under two years and the democratic secure passin Ohio does not rest on a very the national convention, nor be chosen to to hope for any sort of preferment from the party in whose service he has suffered so much; and this not because his party does not sympatize with him, nor because it differs from him on any point of political doctrine, but simply from its lack of courage. Vallandingham never flinched even when he paid the penalty of his devotion with banishment, but his friends dared not, in the hour of their victory, give to his toils and dangers their appropriate reward. But he can console himself with the thought that what is his loss is the country's gain .--
