this week with a half-mast apology, in which he assured his readers that he would "continue to fight Radscals not only on a half-sheet but a quarter-sheet if it should be necessary.

Like a timid boy who whistles while passing a grave-yard at night, he appends the following as if it re-inspired courage in his failing financial fortunes. DRAR SIRs :- Don't fail to publish the JOURNAL. We are willing to take it on a half-sheet or any way we can get it. Give the Radicals hell on a halfsheet if you can't print a whole one. You shall have more subscribers here and at other places too. I will see to that. I have a very smart fourteen year old boy, a good speller and a capital pensman. You can have him a few | Gov. Holden things so strikingly apweeks free of charge. He can learn in a few days to do anything you want done. If you want him, say so. I will bet the Rads can't get him.

Very truly yours, How grand that lad must feel in the part he is to perform in fulminating political damnation for Radicals! what reverence he must look upon a parent that consigns his political foes to hell on the half-shell, and so cheerfully dedicates his offspring to the work. Has there ever been such an instance of parental sacrifice since Abraham of fered up Isaac or Theodore Tilton damned his own family for the sake of public morals? - Asheville Phaeve

The Pioner has struch the key note to the whole of the Journal's troubles when it says - "It has failed to receive that material and from its party." The printers who were so ruthlessly defrand ed of their pay, are of the opinion that the hope of raising this "material aid" and releiving itself of an honest debt, caused that paper to propose a reduction of wages, knowing that the compositors could not accept it and would be compelled to "strike" and by their doing so,an opportunity would be offered them to cry out "oppression," "conspiracy," and that the "material aid" would be forthcoming. But it did not come worth a cent. The party had heard the cry of worf, wolf, too often before. It was Another lot of "rats" have been cap-
