Mr. Morton-Name any good done by the Democratic party in the last thirty-five years.

Mr. Merrimon said in the pure days' of the Republic, when the Democratic party was in the ascendancy, the country prospered as it had never done at any other time. The government was so pure in those days that they paid to the support of the government. (This is a strange sentence-Ed.) The only complaint ever made against the Dem- it so long ago. peratic party was the Republican outery that it was pro-slavery.

Mr. Morton repeated his challenge to any Senator to say a single good thing that the Democratic party had done or even suggested during the last thirty-five years.

Mr. Saulsbury said the Democratic House had investigated and exposed the corrupt practices of the Republican party, and shown a degree of corruption that had astounded the country.

Mr. Morton said they had assumed the role of detectives. Whether they had done anything would be seen when the evidence was presented. The investigations had been conducted ju a way to merit and receive the contempt of the country. The reply of the Seaator was an evasion. He repeated his challenge, and appealed to Mr. Eaton, who, he said, had a good memory. He remembered the fugitive slave law, the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, the Lecompton Constitution, the Dred Scott-decision, the Democrats saying in 1860 that there was no power to keep a State in the Union, their opposition to every war measure, their meeting in Chicago in 1864, when Mr. Tilden was a member of the committee that reported a resolution that the war for the suppression of the rebellion ought to be abandoned. He said that in any other country such a declaration at such a time would be punished as trea-

He remembered their opposition to reconstruction; their Ku Klux and White Leagues, and again he asked what good thing had the party done, Their record was the blackest and most damnable in the history of any party or any country.
