

GEORGE V. TODAY CROWNED KING OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE

Beautiful Weather and Brilliant Ceremony Mark Occasion---Mass of People Give Glad Acclaim

Hundreds of Thousands Greeted King George and Queen Consort Today and the Ceremony at Westminster Abbey, the Presence of an Illustrious Embellishment--Distinction Gained America

London, June 22.--George V, eighth of the House of Windsor, was today consecrated to the service of the British Empire and, in turn, received public homage of his world-wide subjects. With his consort, Queen Mary, his majesty was crowned in the Abbey of Westminster with all the wealth of religious rites and royal ceremonial preserved by historic custom. The picture within the gray walled place, was one of medieval splendor. The coronation services, solemn and imposing, were those handed down from earlier centuries and the actors in the principal and secondary roles of today's great function were garbed in a reproduction of multi-colored gold-embroidered trappings, worn by their ancestors in bygone centuries. The latter made-up a wonderfully effective setting around the central figures. Outside the usually dull streets had been transformed into a mass of color. The King and Queen's progress to the Abbey and their return to Buckingham Palace was one unbroken ovation and was headed with a vast pageant host, with a background of viewing stands and windows and roofs, all of which were crowded to their capacity. Hundreds of thousands of spectators shouted themselves hoarse at central points like the Mall and entrance to the Admiralty Archway, where the government stands held thousands. Trafalgar Square was so densely packed with humanity it would not have been difficult to traverse the square walking on the heads of people.

A Thunderous Welcome. The tumult of thousands welcome was almost deafening as the King and Queen passed on the outward and homeward journey. In the first instance and followed on the return by the stately, superb cavalcade of eminent Princes, many themselves heirs to thrones, statesmen, diplomats, courtiers, soldiers, sailors and men of all hues, races and creeds from the four quarters of the globe. The great ceremonial passed off unmarred by an untoward incident. When dawn broke the skies were heavy and showers fell during the progress of the processions of the royal guests and junior members of the Royal family to the Abbey, but as the King and Queen left Buckingham Palace to be crowned, the heavens smiled and a flood of sunshine brightened the splendid pageant. It was a proud day for the British Empire, but of all its millions the one who, perhaps, had most reason to be proud was denoted by court etiquette, the joy of witnessing the triumphal event. At Sandringham Palace, Queen Mother Alexandra, who forty six years ago, this month, gave Britain a King, awaited news that her son had taken his place in the long line of British monarchs.

The Coronation. Westminster Abbey, the star of the brilliant ceremonial, was a mass of color awaiting the arrival of their majesties by the time the imperial procession left Buckingham Palace. The foreign and colonial representatives, high personages, including heirs to most of the thrones of Europe, occupied the spaces at each angle of the Abbey. Seven thousand crowded the edifices. The arrival of the distinguished Americans attracted great attention. Among these were John Hays Hammond, Special United States Ambassador, J. Pierpont Morgan, and Ambassador Reid. Morgan wore a court uniform of black velvet knee breeches, silver buttons and sword. Ambassador Reid and Mrs. Reid had excellent seats on the floor of the Abbey, near the throne. As the junior members of the British Royal committee entered they were hailed by a blast of trumpets. The Prince of Wales was the cynosure of all eyes. A few minutes after 11 o'clock the trumpets announced the arrival of the King and Queen. The vast audience arose. The scene was marvelously impressive. Lining the avenue of approach to the throne were plerisque yeomen of the guard in scarlet uniforms. A little group of eminent clergymen first entered, followed by functionaries of the Royal household. Then came the standards of the kingdoms, borne by eminent men. Following came the Queen's regalia, borne by nobles. The Queen entered in her wonderful coronation gown, a long purple train, embroidered in gold, borne by six young women, daughters of earls. The Queen carried a bouquet of carnations. After the Queen's cortege the King's regalia, carried by the kingdom's highest nobles, entered. Following came a retinue of high court officials. The King walked in a crimson robe of state. Their majesties passed their thrones, proceeding to chairs of state. Rising, the King replaced the cap of state, which he removed while kneeling. Then the service proper began. The ancient ceremonial familiar for twelve hundred years was performed by the Archbishop of Canterbury. He presented the King facing four-sides of the Abbey in succession. He announced: "Sirs, I here present unto you King George, King of the Realm, whosoever all you who are come to do your homage and service are you willing to do, the same?" The Archbishop's voice sounded, strangely loud, in the impressive silence. When it died away, the spell was broken by a blast of trumpets and a mighty chorus: "God save the King," fairly shook the edifice. Then followed various rites. The King kissed the Bible and signed the oath. The King was anointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who placed the crown upon his head. Ascending the throne the King received the homage of the princes of royal blood. The Peers kissed the monarch's cheek. The simple ceremony of crowning the Queen Consort followed. The Queen ascended the throne and was seated beside the King. After obligations at the altar and sacrament the chief functions of the ceremony concluded. The procession returned for the return to Buckingham Palace. Their majesties' appearance along the line of march brought forth deafening cheers and cries of "God save the King." It was a thrilling show. After the monarch's gold coach passed into Buckingham Palace the King and Queen appeared on the balcony with their coronas on, bowing right and left. A cheer went up from the assembled thousands and afforded one of the most thrilling moments of an interesting day.

A Brilliant Scene. "Long live George V, King by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominion beyond the seas, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India." Such is the official greeting and such the cry taken up today and echoed throughout the country and beyond the seas, as the coronation ceremonies in Westminster Abbey gives official sanction to the reign of the eighth member of the House of Hanover. The coronation of today, with its impressive ceremony of investiture at Westminster Abbey and with its series of spectacular events on a scale of unprecedented grandeur and magnitude, has been planned with the utmost precision of detail under the general direction of the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, assisted by Lord Kitchener, Lord Roberts, and many others familiar with events conducted on a prodigious scale. The program of the day is broadly summed up as follows: 6:30 A. M.: Westminster Abbey opens for royal and official guests and closes at 9 a. m. 9:45 A. M.: Royal procession forms along the route from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Abbey. 7:00 A. M.: King George and Queen Mary, with their lords, ladies, and attendants, leave Buckingham Palace for Westminster Abbey. 11 A. M. to 2 P. M.: Coronation ceremony at Westminster Abbey. 2:30 P. M.: Royal procession through the streets of London, from Constitution Hill through Piccadilly, Pall Mall, Trafalgar Square, Strand and Fleet street, returning by the Mall to Buckingham Palace. Night: Illuminations throughout London, signal fires at hundreds of rocky headlands and ports throughout England, Scotland and Ireland. Dinner at the Foreign Office to the King and Queen and royal and official guests. The central feature of these elaborate ceremonies is the coronation itself, occurring toward noon today in the venerable and historic Westminster Abbey. The King and Queen drove to the Abbey in the famous state carriage which has borne so many Kings and Queens. It was built by King George III in 1761 and is a model of artistic beauty and solidity. It weighs over four tons and its finely polished oak body is covered with allegorical paintings and panels by Capriani. Eight of the celebrated horses from the Royal stables, all of matched cream color, with harness of red morocco and gold-plated fittings, drew the coach on its way along the route to the Abbey. As the King and Queen entered the Abbey they were received by the thousands of royal and official guests, while the choir of Westminster chants Psalm CXXII and the chimes of all London and the kingdom ring out their greeting. The official greeting to the King and Queen is first extended by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who addressing the assembled guests and through them the people of England, said: "Sirs, I here present unto you King George, the undoubted King of this Realm: Wherefore all of you who are come this day to do your homage and service, are you willing to do the same?" The assent of the assembled multitude is given with "God Save the King," and this is taken up and echoed outside, while trumpets sound, announcing the official recognition and the putting on of the crown. The archbishop also receives the oath of the King, solemnly promising to govern the people according to the statutes in Parliament and the respective laws and customs of the same. As the archbishop places the crown upon the King's head, he in tones: "O God, the crown of the faithful: Bless we beseech Thee and sanctify this Thy servant, George our King; and as Thou dost, this day set a crown of pure gold upon his head, so enrich his royal heart with Thine abundant grace and crown him with all princely virtues, through the King eternal Jesus Christ our Lord Amen." The King sits in the historic chair of St. Edward as the crown is placed upon his head. The Dean of Westminster is the custodian of the crown and delivers it to the Archbishop at the moment the latter places it upon the head of the sovereign. This done, the greeting of the assembled guests and the multitude outside is again given and re-echoed throughout the kingdom: "God Save the King." The Queen's coronation is accompanied with stilar ceremonies of impressive dignity. The coronation ceremony combined many other features based on tradition and coming down through the ages, including the anointing, the investing with the armil and royal robe, the delivery of the orb, the presenting of the Holy Bible, the homage, the enthronization, the sermon, the communion, the prayer of consecration, and the Te Deum Laudamus, combining the pomp and pageantry of feudal and medieval ages, with the glitter and outward show of the days of chivalry. WILL BE THROWN IN OPEN SENATE

Finance Committee Will Make Adverse Report

All Tariff Measures Will Be Placed Before the Senate, But No Detailed Report Will Be Made--Wool Bill To Be Reported By July 10th. Washington, June 22.--The already badly tangled situation in the Senate was still further complicated today when the Senate Finance Committee decided to throw the wool revision and so called "farmers' free list" bills, recently passed by the Democratic House of Representatives into open Senate at once to take their chances along with Canadian reciprocity. Both measures, however, have received formal adverse committee reports. The committee refused to take the responsibility for reporting in detail these measures at any given time and decided to cast the burden of Senate legislation upon the coalition of the Democrats and insurgent Republicans, suddenly brought about last night, when the wool bill came from the House. The Finance Committee was instructed to report the bill by July 10th. It was reported that Senator Clapp proposed to offer a resolution of instruction as to the free list bill, but the committee forestalled such action. The effect on reciprocity action is problematical. Some of the opponents of reciprocity expressed the hope it would kill the bill. Friends of the measure agreed it meant long delay. Some of the insurgents declared that reciprocity ultimately would pass, but in an amended form. There seems little doubt that the fight will be on efforts to amend the bill. Other predictions made are that the Senate will soon be plunged into what might prove a general tariff revision fight.

STOCKS TODAY

New York, June 22.--Wall Street--The bear traders made a drive at the stock market at the opening. Prices fell away rapidly and selling was unusually active. The market showed signs of nervousness. A variety of unfavorable reports assisted the bears, driving down the prices severely. Chief among these was the fear of a prolonged tariff agitation and unfavorable crop news. Losses of a point were general. The market seemed waiting developments in the general situation. Speculation dwindled until there were long intervals when ticker was idle. Prices averaged about half a point above the lowest. Small recoveries were made when forenoon selling ceased. Trading shrank decidedly as the prices hardened.

TELEGRAPH WIRE SAVED LIFE OF SCHOOL GIRL
