QUAKERS CONTRIBUTE MEN TO THE ARMY

London, June 19.—The Quakers notwithstanding their peaceful tradition have contributed 215 men to the British army and navy and 43 to the army medical corps. In addition, 43 have joined the home guards and 15 are serving on recruiting committees. These figures are taken from the annual meeting of the Society of Friends. The society's book of discipline declares its members must maintain an "unequivocal testimony against war." This is a vital principle of Quakerism. Accordingly about 50 of those enlisting sent in their resignations but only thirty of these were accepted. Besides the soldiers, the parents of the soldiers openly sympathize with the war. These may all be properly expelled, but the feeling among the

ASKS FOR HALF OF AVAILABLES

What Lord Kitchener Wants For His Big New Army

London, June 19.—Lord Kitchener has asked for half of the available recruiting material of the United Kingdom for his newest army. He wants to raise an additional 300,000 and an analysis of census statistics indicates there are not over 600,000 men left in the United Kingdom to draw on, if the industrial needs of the country are taken into consideration.

Army estimates for February provided for 3,000,000 men. These, and perhaps more, are serving. According to The Daily News, it would take another million to cover the navy, the armed auxiliary vessels, the mine-sweepers and applicants to the army rejected as physically unfit. Lloyd-George is authority for the statement that 2,000,000 civilians are employed in the manufacture of equipment and munitions and in their transport. Another 1,500,000 comprising policemen, firemen, officials, seamen, miners and laborers, keep the civil life of the country going. Great Britain, therefore, is employing a grand total of 7,500,000 men.

The last census gave the United Kingdom 8,100,000 men of military age, which is between the years of 18 and 40.

Deducting the soldiers and sailors now serving and those previously rejected, together with the necessary civilian war and industrial workers, there are only 600,000 men of military age left out of which to raise the new army of 300,000.

The advocates of the volunteer system say this can be done. Conscriptors are as yet a small, if noisy, minority. Kitchener has been severely criticized at times for his recruiting methods, but in one instance at least he knew more about his business than the public. When in the early days of the war he raised the physical standard from 5 feet 4 inches to 5.6, newspaper critics told him that this was an age of science and not of brawn, and the little man proved the best fighter by reason of being able to live on less food and to take cover easier in action. But Kitchener was then facing the problem of clothing, equipping, feeding, quartering and drilling the new men. From a normal peace issue of 245,000 pairs of shoes a year to the British army, the order was immediately jumped up to 6,500,000 pairs; suits of woolen underclothes from 114,000 to 7,000,000; 250 uniforms to 5,250,000 and other supplies in proportion. Besides, training grounds and quarters had to be prepared and officers found to drill the men.

To shut down on the supply of recruits until those accepted could be cared for, Kitchener raised the size limit, which he has gradually reduced to 5 feet 2 inches for the bantam battalions.

The fact that England has managed to accomplish all this without conscription is the chief argument of the upholders of the volunteer system.

Human Factors in Telephone Service

It takes a lot of people working together intelligently and harmoniously with the best telephone equipment to give good telephone service.

The information operator, the engineer who plans for your future needs, the line tester, and the accountant who makes out your bills for telephone service, are a few of the many kinds of telephone workers who co-operate to make the Bell system the most efficient in the world.

The telephone service you receive daily is a part of the unequalled service of the vast Bell system. It has the best thought of a trained organization working together with the best telephone equipment and standardized methods to provide universal service for the American nation as a whole.

To realize such ideals your co-operation is necessary when you deal with telephone employes or with other telephone subscribers.
