MARRIED IN STORE.
That things more prosaic than the wrapping of packages and displaying of merchandise can and do sometimes occur in department stores was demonstrated yesterday afternoon when Miss Florence Clewis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. The ceremony was performed at 1:40 o'clock and was witnessed by the sales girls and male clerks of the Belk-Williams establishment.

MUCH ENTHUSIASM WAS MANIFESTED AT THE MEETING

cause Mr. Wilson had served the people he could look to none other than the people for support. His attitude towards big business has not been of a nature to cause it to rally to his support, but it has aroused its enmity and caused it to line up against him. In closing Mr. McRae sought to impress upon his listeners the fact that an educational campaign cost money—a lot of money—and as big business is not to supply it the individual must contribute and swell the common fund into sufficient proportions to advertise the great good that has been accomplished by the Wilson administration. Senator W. B. Cooper, who spoke briefly, admitted that the Wilson administration had made mistakes, but added that when the good and the bad were compared the former so far outweighed the latter that one was prone to excuse the few mistakes with a smile. Mr. Cooper urged that North Carolina be kept right and that North Carolina lend her every energy to keeping the other sections of the country right. He concluded by saying that he voted for Mr. Wilson four years ago and that he would do so again with a clear conscience.

Col. Walker Taylor explained when Mr. Wilson discovered he possessed a mind. According to the Colonel, Mr. Wilson's father was preaching in Wilmington at the time and coming down the street one morning he told a crowd of friends that his son, Thomas, (meaning Woodrow) had just reported to him that he had discovered that he possessed a mind. "Think of it," Colonel Taylor said, "Woodrow Wilson discovered he had a mind right here in Wilmington." Colonel Taylor told his audience of what the present administration had done for this city; of the vast amount of revenue that now passes through the local customs house—revenue that once passed through other ports and the present administration caused this change, according to the Collector.

Chairman W. A. McGirt presided over the meeting and handled matters in an admirable manner. Just before adjournment was taken he called on Mr. Cashwell and that gentleman implored all to see that their names were on the registration books and to see that they voted in the approaching election.

The following message from Mr. Henry Morgenthau, treasurer of the National Campaign Committee, and was read by Chairman McGirt and was received with much enthusiasm:
"New York, Oct. 3, 1916.

"W. A. McGirt, Chairman Woodrow Wilson Club, Wilmington, N. C.
"Please convey to the membership of your club assurances of our appreciation of the campaign, that is under way in Wilmington. We recall the splendid way in which your club responded to our appeals four years ago, and now that we can depend on your best efforts this year, when the fight is harder and our needs are greater, Wilson will win it such Democrats as yours help bear the burden of the fight. We must not falter, we must make success doubly sure. Bear this in mind in your endeavors, and give us the best possible support in Wilmington.

"HENRY MORGENTHAU."

A man is worth one dollar a day from his chin down. His sky-piece is the part that pays.

The men who design such clothes as Strouse & Brothers, B. Keuppenheimer & Co., and College Cut Clothing get salaries that would make some local tailors dizzy. It's all in the designing—and if you would get the benefit of the highest paid talent in America you must come here.
