NOW BELLAMY AND HARDEN OFFER I

Peplac Experts Will Meet Public There Tomorrow-Good Work of Tonic Grows.

Starting tomorrow Peplac, the Peerless Tonic for combating stomach, liver and kidney ills, nervous debility and the like, will be demonstrated at Bellamy's and Hardin's Drug stores.

Peplac, while but recently introduced in this city, already has won a ton where at least one man or woman

So great has been the interest of local people in Peplac that arrangements were necessary to not only place Peplac on sale at each of the respective drug store by skilled Peplac Exports.

The Bellamy and Hardin Drug stores are centrally located and afford splendid opportunity for all Wilmington men and women interested in Peplac to visit either of these pharmacies while "down town" and learn at first the results that may be expected from

But Rupprecht is a Bavarian, heir to the throne, in fact, and Germans long ago came to look upon every member of the Bavarian royal house as a "jinx," as the Am-

There is no disputing the fact that the Bavarian royal family has long been one of the unluckiest in all Furope. Every newspaper reader is able to recall the ill fate that has pursued its rulers for generations. The tragic history of the family dates back to the dreamer, King Ludwig II. From his earliest childhood Ludwig showed signs of insanity. But it was not until 1864, when he ascended the throne, that his eccentricities began to be noticed. He was nominally succeeded on the throne by his brother Otto, who proved still more mad than Ludwig. The first symptoms of King Otto's madness were visible during the Franco-German war, when he called out a squad of cavalry to charge straight at a stone wall, which he insisted was a body of the enemy's infantry.

During the lifetime of King Otto the country was ruled under the regency of his uncle, Prince Luitpold, who died in 1912 in his ninety-second year. Less than a year later the mad old King Otto was deposed and was succeeded on the throne by his cousin, the present King Ludwig, the father of Prince Rupprecht, who is commanding the German army division that has borne the brunt of the allied onslaughts in Flanders during the past

The Bavarian curse seems to have extended to the present heir to the throne. He has been unfortunate in his military career and extremely unhappy in his family life. His wife was a sister to the present Queen of the Belgians, and was celebrated throughout Germany not only for her wonderful charms as a woman, but also for her love of music and art and the help she gave her father in his scientific labors. Rupprecht and the lovely Princess Gabrielle came together at Florence in March of 1900, the engagement was publicly announced at Easter and they were married in July. The wedded life of the royal couple, begun happily, and full of that happiness which the presence of children can give, was not so happy in other ways, and it came to a gloomy end when the Crown Princess in 1912, broken in health, depressed by family bereavement and by the death of her threeyear-old son, and tired of her troubles, died suddenly at Sorrento, in litaly, of paralysis of the heart. In those twelve years, there had been five children, one of whom, in 1906, died still-born. The first child, Luitpold, born in 1901, grew up, under the mother's wonderfully maternal care, into a beautiful boy, and was taken away by diphtheria three years ago, after his father had gone to the front. The other children were Irmingard, who died a baby; Albert, born in 1905
