NEW YORK-DAY-BY-DAY.

(Special Correspondent of The Dispatch). New York, Oct. 27.—Anson Tebeau Cole, named after two great heroes of baseball, has spent his 28 years at Waxahachie, Texas, and all he ever knew about the world's series until this year was what he read in the Waxahachie Weekly Warbler. But he always said that some day he would see a world series.

There never was a chance until someone found oil under his arm, and recently he made $30,000 leasing ground and he took to Chicago to see the first game. Then he came on to New York and saw the first game here and was to have seen the second—but something happened.

He was in the rotunda of his hotel and wore a Texas sombrero with a rattlesnake band. That marked him for "easy pickings." A glib stranger with a Southern drawl tried to scrape up an acquaintance, but failed the first time and tried again.

On the day of the second game they were standing in front of the hotel and a passing man dropped a glove. The stranger returned it and the loser of the glove said he knew by that token he had met two honest men, Cole seemed pleased.

Then the glove owner confided that his uncle had just died in Dublin and one of the provisions of the will was that he must distribute $20,000 among the poor. Why prolong the agony?

Could Mr. Cole prove he was honest? He could. He had $200 with him, a diamond ring worth $500 and three tickets for the world series.

"Now I must test your confidence," said the stranger. "With your $200, the ring and the baseball tickets, in my hand I will leave your room in the hotel, and if you peek I will know you are without confidence."

Cole didn't peek for fifteen minutes. Then the hall was filled with commotion. Mr. Cole says gentlemen are not like that in Waxahachie.

Seen around town: Nat Goodwin dining with three fair ones—one his wife, Scotti, the singer, polishing his monocle on Broadway. Sybil Carmen lunching with her press agent. A little girl stopping Mayor Mitchell to give him a flower. A Japanese actress driving her own car. Channing Pollock, the playwright, trying to look happy in evening clothes. A recruiting officer hailing a dantant hooter to enlist while a crowd laughed. A cripple in front of the Public Library reading Shakespeare.

Beefless Tuesday is now three weeks old. Just old enough for the press agent at a Broadway cafe to think up an idea right out of his own head. He declares that at his place they are going to have soupless Saturdays, sausageless Sundays, muttonless Mondays, tripeless Thursdays, and frijoleless Fridays. And what is more nearly every editor in town used the story. No doubt on the theory that such ingenuity demanded a reward.

Shortly before Ward Leonard, the noted inventor, passed on he was getting on an elevator in one of his plants. A man stepped on that he recognized but could not recall his name. He knew, however, that at one time he had been in his employ.

"Let me see," said Mr. Leonard, who, like all inventors, was absent minded, "you are with the Westinghouse people now, are you not?"

"Yes," was the reply. "Are they doing well by you?" asked Mr. Leonard.

"Very well, indeed," and here a floor was reached that brought the conversation to a close—and Mr. E. M. Herr, president of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, stepped out with a faint smile about his lips.

Hard Luck Note: Florence Nash got a lot of praise in the Yiddish press at the opening of her new show. But she cannot prove it.

One of the features of "The Million Dollar Doll" which will appear at the Academy of Music tonight will be the illuminated "Runway" on which a number of the songs and dances will be given, over the heads of the audience. The "Runway" is one of the latest novelties and brings the company and audience in close touch with each other, breaking down that barrier, known as "behind the footlights." This novelty has proved a veritable sensation in many of the cities, and some of the "Runway Numbers" have received as many as 8 and 10 encores a night. This is only one of the many new and novel features presented in this new musical comedy, which has been heralded as the most pretentious musical offering of the day. The prices range from 50 cents to $1.50.
