COST OF BREAD TO THE BAKERS

Reports Show That 16 Ounce Loaf Costs Wholesale Bakers 7 1/2 Cents.

(By United Press) Washington, Nov. 10.—First grade wheat bread the country over costs wholesale bakers just under 7 1/2 cents a 16-ounce loaf. Chain store bakers can turn out the same product at just under 6 cents.

Trade Commissioners reported tonight after months of cost investigation. Figures include overhead charges, salesmen's commissions and similar costs, but not profits.

Extraordinary importance is attached to the report because President Wilson within the next few days is expected to issue a proclamation regulating the bakery business. In all previous price moves, his decisions have closely followed trade commission conclusions.

This proclamation is expected to set standard sizes and quality of bread.

That size of loaves be standardized as a means to cheapen production. Sixteen and 24 ounce loaves to prevail because of superior qualities and better flavor. One delivery a day by bakeries to grocers. Retail dealers not to be allowed to return unsold loaves.

With these reforms, still cheaper bread should result, the commission declared.

Its estimated costs tonight are based on $11 a barrel flour—a price in excess of current prices. In a 16-ounce loaf material costs wholesale bakers 4 1/2 cents; manufacturing costs one cent plus overhead, selling costs etc. one and two-thirds cents. Decimally the total is 7.4855 cents for the wholesale bakeries; chain stores, 5.8494 cents.

Lowest production costs were found in the Potomac district and the highest in Illinois, Iowa and Missouri.
