HEMENWAY NEWS.

Editors: Rida Butler and Lillie May Britt.

The Hemenway school was treated Monday morning last to a recital given by Mrs. McDowell, wife of McDowell, the famous and world renowned American composer. The children of the Hemenway thoroughly enjoyed the recital, and appreciated the great honor that had come to the school.

The Hemenway school now has a student the first and only Major of Thrift in the country. Master Everett Huggins, honor roll student of the advanced section of the Seventh grade. The Hemenway school has every reason to be proud of its record thus far, it being the leading school in the city and county in the sale of Thrift and War Saving stamps. Other leaders in the Hemenway include: Elizabeth Silvermann, captain; Edna North, Lucile Page, Robert Platt, soldiers.

Mr. Blair and Mr. Hinant were over Thursday morning to read the honor roll which included 128 names, 75 girls and 53 boys. The total for the spelling honor roll was 82, 55 girls and 27 boys respectively.

The eighth grade boys won the attendance record for the month, having a per centage of attendance of 78.4 per cent.

A great number of magazines have been contributed by the children of the Hemenway school to the soldiers of the Fort Caswell reading room the last week.

The FOWLER CULTIVATOR Makes More Bread for The Nation

Directions for Operating Fig. 1
In this form the Fowler is used after plowing and harrowing to prepare a seed bed. All the fine soil slips between the upper and lower blades forming a seed bed which is a perfect mulch. All clods, trash or stones, unable to pass through the narrow space between the upper and lower blades, slide along to the ends of the blades and are left in the middles between the rows. In doing this the upper blades move just above the surface of the ground and act like rippers to other cultivator will remove from the seed bed all clods, stones and trash and leave a perfectly level surface consisting only of fine pulverized soil, in which to plant the seed. The Fowler is also used in this form, when run deep, to throw up a raised seed bed, completing the bed at one trip through.

Directions for Operating Fig. 2
With the Plow Foot in the center removed the Fowler is used for early cultivation. It is used for haring off and cultivating both sides of the row at one trip through. By the action of the upper blades the pulverized soil is left on either side of the growing plant. All grass and weeds are cut off and left on the surface to die. The Fowler leaves a perfectly level surface behind it, entirely free from little furrows which would cause washing during heavy rains. In a dry season the fine dust which is thrown to the roots. The clods and trash previously thrown to the middle now slip over the blade without leaving their place in the center between the rows.

Directions for Operating Fig. 3
When plants become too large for cultivating astride the row a short blade is attached on the right to throw the fine mulch prepared by the Fowler to the roots of the growing plant. In this case the Plow Foot is replaced and the long blade on the left destroys all weeds and further pulverizes the soil between the rows. Note that the upper blades are taken off for this work. As all trash and clods have been removed from the proximity of the plants by the previous cultivations the row nothing is now left within reach of the short blade but a fine dust which is thrown to the roots. The clods and trash previously thrown to the middle now slip over the blade without leaving their place in the center between the rows.

Directions for Operating Fig. 4
For late cultivation, to keep down the final growth of weeds and vines and to break the hard crust forming after rains, only the long lower blades are used. These blades move parallel to and above the roots of the crop, which toward maturity have been removed from the proximity of the plants by the previous cultivations. These blades do not injure these roots across the crop roots and deep enough to destroy many of them, making late cultivation with such tools impossible. When crop roots are damaged the energy of the plant is devoted to restoring such roots and the farmer develops either stalk or fruit. It is late cultivation which gives that final complete maturity to the crop so necessary to a maximum yield.

A Strong Guaranty With Each Fowler—It Will Do More Work and Better Than Any Other
Unless otherwise specified the Fowler is shipped with 32-inch Blades which, by means of the expanding lever, can be made to cut various widths of from 20 to 40 inches. The extra Short Blade shown in Fig. 3 is also shipped with every Cultivator. Longer or shorter blades covering any width from 15 inches to 45 inches will be furnished if preferred.
