THREE MILLION VOTES ARE ABSOLUTELY FREE THIS WEEK FOR ENERGY

The Dispatch Announces Great Special Vote Offer — 150,000 Extra Votes For Each Twenty-five Dollars in New or Renewal Subscriptions—3,000,000 Votes Free—Ten Big Price Ballots Offered This Week — Five For Each Division—Candidates Should Strive For Them — The Prize Ballots Are Essential to Those Desiring Success

One of the most attractive and liberal special vote offers of the Dispatch Circulation Campaign is announced today. Each participant should easily discover that the special vote offer is very attractive and each one should manifest an effort, the like that has never been witnessed during the previous three weeks of the Campaign. In addition to the special vote offer there will be five prize ballots awarded to the five most successful candidates in their respective divisions. These ballots will be awarded for thrift and energy displayed to the five candidates of each division that secure the greatest amount of collection on subscriptions, and also to further their own cause in the Campaign, and secure subscriptions to the fastest growing daily of the Old North State and also the Palmetto State.

Special Vote Offer With Prize Ballots.

The special vote offer beginning Monday morning, July 1st, will terminate at 10 p. m., July 13th. The Dispatch will, in addition to the regular votes, issue 150,000 extra votes for the securing of each club of $25 in new or renewal subscriptions. There is absolutely no limit placed upon the amount of collections candidates can make upon subscriptions, and just realize for one moment that 150,000 extra votes will be issued for every $25 collected. In addition to this very liberal special vote offer the candidate of either division that secures the greatest amount of collections beginning Monday, July 1st, and continuing for one week up to and inclusive of Saturday, July 6th, will in addition to the regular and special votes of 150,000 for each $25 collected on subscriptions will receive a prize ballot of 500,000 extra votes, to the two candidates of both divisions collecting the second greatest amount of money on subscriptions will each receive the second prize ballot of 400,000 extra votes, and the two candidates of both divisions collecting the third greatest amount of money on subscriptions will each receive a prize ballot of 300,000 extra votes, and the two candidates of both divisions collecting the fourth greatest amount of money on subscriptions will each receive a prize ballot of 200,000 extra votes, and the two candidates that collect the fifth greatest amount of money on subscriptions will each receive a prize ballot of 100,000 extra votes. These prize ballots are in addition to the regular and special votes, and affords each and every candidate the long looked for opportunity of the Campaign when they could secure the greatest number of votes for effort and energy manifested. The time has arrived and each participant should begin to see every person that is possible and secure their subscriptions to the Dispatch, and improve to the greatest possible extent the opportunity of claiming either the Studebaker Six, the Chevrolet, or one of the many other costly and valuable awards on August 17th. Do not forget the prize ballots are offered as an incentive for effort this week, so start an active Campaign now, manifest great effort and receive an abundance of votes upon every subscription to the Dispatch, and let this special vote offer be the opportunity to not only open the door that leads to success but cross the threshold and be on the inside.

His Stenographer

CHAPTER LVIII.

Jane is Offered a Bribe.

A few days after the old bookkeeper had talked with Jane she came home all excitement.

"That old geezer asked me to kiss him today," she said. "He didn't attempt to kiss me, but kept on asking if I 'wouldn't give him a kiss?' I talked to him like a Dutch uncle. I guess I have shut him up for good. If I haven't I guess I'll have to get out."

She hadn't "shut him up." A day or two afterward he tried to coax her again to kiss him; then he offered her a bribe. He would raise her pay to $18 a week at once if she would. Jane left immediately not waiting to finish the day. She went back to the bureau and gave the women the true reason for leaving. The woman in charge of the bureau immediately called up another girl who had left the same place, no reason, and asked why she left. She confessed to the same cause as made Jane leave. That man was put on the bureau's blacklist, but Jane's experience with him was not yet over.

The bureau found her another position the very next day. She was waiting for us when we got home anxious to tell us all about it.

More Than One Entrance—and Name.

"You never heard anything like it, girls!" she exclaimed. "I took the card from the bureau. The office was in the same building with that old duffer's office that I had just left. You could have knocked me down with a feather when I saw him. He was a little surprised to see me, too. He had given another name, and used another entrance to his office. I never had seen that door open, and did not suppose he ever used it. I wish you could have seen his face when I said I was going to tell them at the bureau of this trick. He'll have to move as well as changing his name before he gets another girl from that office. That nice woman who runs it was awfully indignant. Yet she said it was a good thing it happened to a sensible girl who couldn't be fooled by his promise of a large salary. She told her assistant never to send another girl to that building without investigating."

Jane was only out altogether about ten days when she was sent to a fine position with reliable people who gave her $18 to start, with a chance to improve herself both as to position and salary if she tried.

I hate to tell these things. I wish all employers were honest, all girls good. But if one is to tell things as they are they cannot gloss over either wickedness or incompetency. But I believe that the majority of employers are gentlemen, real business men who want their work well done. But that there are such men is a certain fact; and girls cannot be on their guard if kept in ignorance. Another thing: If girls would stand together and refuse to work for such men, they soon will be men of the past because they will be unable to get anyone to do their work properly and be subjected to insult at the same time.

Talk of Other Girls.

Jane amused us by telling us of the other things she saw and heard at the typewriting bureau. She said that the dirtier, the more unkemt and uncombed a girl was the more she kicked about the kind of an office to which she was sent.

"They seem to think they must work in an office where there is mahogany furniture and Turkish rugs," she told us, "and I'll bet by their looks their own homes are like pig pens. One of the commonest looking girls in the place came back from where they had sent her and refused to take the place. When they asked her why she didn't stay she said: 'I ain't going to work in no office where they has bare floors and oak desks. My chum works in a dandy place. They have glass tops on all the mahogany desks, lovely rugs on the floor, and everything like a parlor, I want a place like that.' She never seem to think that she would look out of place in an office like that."

Tell us some more, I urged.

"I was awfully sorry for one woman," Jane went on. She was tenderhearted. "This woman was about 40 years old. She said no one wanted her because she was too old. She was awfully bitter, poor thing. I got to talking with her. She said that just as soon as an office found out she was not young they wouldn't even talk to her. It scared me, girls, honest it did. We'll have to make hay while the sun shines in this business. I always had an idea that the more experience a girl had the more she was worth, but I guess I'm wrong. I wonder if they can't keep up the pace, the long hours and the speed. I wish I knew.'

I also wished I knew. Jane's talk had made me very thoughtful. I remembered the woman in the office where I worked who, because she was older and had been there longer, expected the place given me. I decided that after a certain age the stenographer must either go backward or she must strike out for herself—if she didn't marry.
