QUEER EPITAPHS  "I have made something of a study tive Boutell, of Chicago, in justifica tion of the frequency with which he has recently adorned his Congression al speechens with samplee of tombstone ootry. "I keep a book in which I jot down those which appear to me most unique and anusing. I have canned the tombstones of Englandand those of many of our Northern States. One of the funniest ones to me I have not yet used in my speech es. I found it in New England som months ago. It reads: Beneath the monumental stones Lie alt hat's left of Susan Jones. Her name was Lord and was not Jones

Jones was used to rhyme with stones.
"My own theory about many of said Mr. Boutell, ; is that they were composed and chiseled into the ston by somebody else than the immediat friends of the deceased. Some hem undoubtedly were written as jokey I think it probable that the stone masons in those days of com parativeiy illiteracy were allowed to nscribe poetic lines to the memory of the dead, and that they often took unusual liberties in the range of expression."
