From A1 excused to go back to class.

teria to learn about what is appropriate to discuss with friends regarding changes to their bodies and what should only be discussed with parents or guardians.

The students took a verbal pretest, and the facilitator answered the questions and explained how they should not make fun of others because they may be going through the changes of puberty.

During the afternoon, parents were invited to the school not only for a special performance from each grade but also to hear about the statistics and signs of bullying from the Poe Center's Senior Director of Educational Programming, Thomas Ray.

The first parent session was for parents who have students in third through fifth grade.

As the program began, each grade performed a patriotic song in remembrance of September 11. After each class sang, they were Windsor Elementary School Principal Tracy Gregory welcomed everyone to the special information session and briefly discussed Title 1 funds for the school.

The 2017-2018 allocation for Windsor Elementary School is $59,651.

According to Gregory, the money will be used in several different ways throughout the school.

An estimated $20,400 will be used to hire-to-hire personnel including teacher assistants and tutors.

$1,000 will go toward staff development training at a math conference in Greensboro, which is required for school improvement.

$7,000 will be used for supplies and materials, and $8,000 will be used for computer materials and software.

"$10,000 will go toward the purchase of additional Chromebooks for the usage of the students. We have had an increase in enrollment this year, and we will need to purchase additional laptops," said Gregory.

Fifth grade students from Windsor Elementary School perform a patriotic song in remembrance of 9/11.

After her presentation, she turned the program over to Ray.

The program titled "Bullying Uncovered" began with a pretest. Parents could submit their answers to the multiple choice and true or false questions by using a remote.

As the parents answered each question, Ray would explain the answers. The questions varied from "Do boys bully more than girls?" to "What is the percentage of middle schoolers that get bullied."

Ray gave examples of how bullying can affect the health of a child.

"Bullying can physically cause a child to get sick. It can cause inability to eat or sleep, upset stomach and other problems," said Ray.

He explained he understood how bullying affects a child's health because as a young girl his daughter was bullied and it caused her to suffer from some of these symptoms.

Ray also explained warning signs that may be an indication a child is being bullied.

The biggest topic was the increased cases of online and social media bullying.

"Children need to understand that once something is posted to the internet it cannot be taken back. Even things posted to Snapchat can be copied with a screenshot," he added. Ray explained that children need to understand the rules and etiquette of the internet and social media just as they would if they were going to a friend's house.

After the parents of grades third through fifth finished, the parents from students in kindergarten through second grade listened to each grade perform a patriotic song and listened to the same program.

The Poe Center is located in Raleigh and specializes in bringing programs on bullying and other topics to the schools.
